"Bothwell himself was not a first-rate character, perhaps, but we must recall that people then were more violent, more brutal, than we are today. They depended more on instinct.

Unusual Historical Drama

"The mysterious character of Elizabeth, which may never be cleared up completely, plays an important part in any life of Mary. It was a strange, perhaps unique moment of history that brought together two women of such opposite genius, yet of such great courage and spiritual stature. I think Elizabeth did not truly hate Mary. She was in great danger, you know. This English island was too small to hold two such personalities. It was a historical necessity that one had to be crushed.

"And Mary was not crushed before her execution. She was not as helpless as some have believed. You must not forget that if Elizabeth had died, or had been murdered, Mary immediately would have become Queen of England and Scotland. It was only a step. Even in prison she was never more than one step from complete victory. It was within her reach until the moment of her death.

"History always loves the conquerors, but poets love the loser the forlorn hope, the lost cause. That is the eternal justice of it. Those who are shipwrecked on reality are dear to the poets. That is one reason why we have so much material about Mary.

Hongkong Routs Shanghai Team

Northerners Have Weak Backs And Goalie And Beaten Before Big Crowd

Rengo

HONGKONG, Feb. 4.—In overcast weather and before a record crowd, Hongkong swamped Shanghai by seven goals to one in the interport soccer match played here this afternoon.

The visitors generally played a good brand of football on the slippery ground, but their forwards were woefully weak in front of goal, and it was a tale of missed opportunities.

Visiting Backs Weak

For Shanghai Harry Madar, Alec Boisserie and Favacho were outstanding, but the visiting back and the goalie were very weak.

The first half was just a tale of goals, the Colony obtaining six and the visitors one, through a penalty.

Almost immediately from the center-kick Hongkong went one up, Tam Kong-pak taking the ball from Madar's foot and netting. The next minute the Colony went further ahead through Ridley, who put the finishing touch to a pretty movement.

Shanghai then came into the picture, invading home territory for the first time. After frittering away several opportunities the visitors were awarded a penalty, with which N. Z. Lee made no mistake.

This goal served only to spur the home team to greater efforts, and within the next 15 minutes Hongkong had amassed such a commanding lead that the fate of the visitors was sealed then and there.

The penalty brought forth two immediate replies, one from Tso Kwai-shing and the other from Howe. The latter's goal was the result of a brilliant solo effort, lobbing the ball over the advancing goalie's head after beating three defenders.

Pardoe, the local center-half, next increased the margin with a sensational goal. He ballooned the ball from almost the middle of the field, and Ward misjudged it to allow it to pass over his head into the top of the net.

Hongkong's Sixth Goal

Hongkong's sixth goal was the result of a penalty just before the interval, Tam Kong-pak making no mistake.

At half time the Colony led by six goals to one.

Shanghai improved after the resumption and pressed continuously, but the visitors were unable to finish off movements.

The only goal of this half came from Howe. In a breakaway the local center-forward ran through the Shanghai defence and beat Ward with a grounder.

Although Shanghai came near to success several times, there was no further scoring, and the match ended in one of the heaviest defeats suffered by the northerners in an interport against the Colony.

Television Near In Great Britain

Postmaster General Hopes To See It In Use During Coming Year

Television for the British public in 1935 was forecast by Sir Kingsley Wood, the Postmaster General, in a speech on postal matters in London recently. The committee under Lord Selsdom appointed to investigate the whole matter has finished its work and its report will be laid before Parliament shortly.

British manufacturers of radio apparatus are all ready to go ahead as soon as it is known that regular television broadcasts will take place. Experiments have been in progress for over a year past on wavelengths of the order of 7 meters and thereabouts, according to the New York Herald Tribune. The maximum range of these is about 330 miles, so that other transmitters than those in use for the ordinary sound broadcasting will have to be used.

These will probably be established near big towns in addition to those at existing regional stations. Programs, to start with at any rate, will consist to a considerable extent of talkie films, as these lend themselves so well for television. There is also a prospect that the telephone lines may be utilized to overcome the difficulty of distance with the ultra-short waves.

The broadcasting of television on the medium waves has suffered from lack of detail. This is due to congestion of stations which allows so little spread on each side of the wavelength used. This difficulty disappears when the ultra-short waves are used where as many stations can find room in a few meters as can barely be crammed into the 300 meters reserved for European broadcasting.

The day when cricket and football matches and other big outdoor events and scenes can be adequately televised is probably still distant. The class of program hitherto provided by the British Broadcasting Corporation has been of interest to the television enthusiast, but cannot be said to have had real entertainment value. But television for all really looks quite near now, and one may soon be able to see the person one is talking to on the telephone, and look at and listen to takie films in the comfort on one's home.

Security Wanted By People, Says Banker

to increase the production of those who are employed without balancing the power of consumption is unsound and can only lead to destruction. We must realize that the economic process by which society is held together is the exchange of services. The end of production must be consumption."

He has no sympathy with destructive criticism. Not long ago he said: "I am sometimes amused at the drive being made by some of the vested interests of this country, the orthodox crowd that brought us to the brink of chaos, as exemplified in speeches at bankers' conventions criticizing the Administration as they have done and are doing. I do not mean that construcive criticism should not be offered. The President, the Administration, and all believe in it. But when criticism is offered on the program, something in the nature of a sound substitute should be offered.

"I sometimes feel that were it not for the punishment all would be forced to take, I would like to see, for the sake of a lesson, President Roosevelt retract all aid thus far given to the country, stopping all Home Owners Loan Corporation and Federal Farm Act appropriations, closing the CCC camps, stopping all PWA work, as well as benefit payments to farmers, drought relief, emergency relief action, RFC loans, and other similar measures, and let business stand on its own feet."

It was a snow-storm in the valley of the Jordan, which Brigham Young years ago had selected as the promised land, that in a way was responsible for Mr. Eccles becoming a member of the New Deal. A luncheon was being held by the University of Utah at which Stuart Chase was to be the principal speaker. The storm delayed the train upon which the economist was traveling and the toastmaster called upon Mr. Eccles to fill in the time.

While the banker was talking the economist arrived, heard a part of the speech and the result was a letter of introduction to a young professor at Columbia, some of whose view apparently coincided with those of Mr. Eccles.

There was no occasion to use that letter at once, but, on his way back to Utah from his appearance before the Senatorial Committee in Washington, he stopped off to see Rexford Tugwell. His brief-case was filled with memoranda of his proposals before the Committee and when the professor asked him about his ideas he handed the papers to him.

Tugwell Calls Eccles

That was in February, 1933, and it was not until the following October that he heard from Professor Tugwell, who was then in Washington and who suggested that Mr. Eccles come on to meet "some folks." He went, and met Wallace and Ickes, Hopkins and Frank, and a number of others connected with the New Deal.

Several months passed and he was back in Utah looking after his business interests when he was notified that he had been appointed Assistant to the Secretary of the Treasury. For the last ten months he has been sawing wood. He has not figured much in the newspapers but all the time he has been studying and also representing the Treasury on the HOLC, the Far Credit Association, and the AAA.

Radical that he is in ideas, his manner and his appearance give no hint of it. When it was time for me to leave, my drawing was not quite finished and he refused to sign it until it was, a position that no conservative banker, and I have drawn many of them, has ever taken. This was a revelation of the man's character. It disclosed his conservatism, as well as his thoroughness, and made one feel that he would put his name to nothing concerning which he had any doubt.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Hospital Without Patients

The intercepting hospital of the Londonderry Port Sanitary Board, located at Ballyratton, Country Donegal, Ireland, has the distinction of never having had a patient. It was erected as an isolation hospital for the reception of patients from ships entering the Port of Londonderry, about 20 miles away, but fortunaely no case of sea-borne disease has arisen since is completion.

However, complications might arise if it did get a patient, because the governing board is under one government and the land is under another. When the Treaty between Britain and Ireland was signed December 6, 1921, the hospital and one contributing area were put under control of the Irish Free State portion of the Province of Ulster., But the office of the Board and remaining contributory areas were left under the control of the Six-county section of Ulster, known politically as "Northern Ireland." And although Donegal is in the extreme north of Ireland the present Irish Free State is referred to in the Treaty as "Southern Ireland."

DINNER PARTY AT CHINESE Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Y. T. Lee, one of the secretaries at the Chinese Y.M.C.A., 2 of 40, 2-chome, Jimbocho, Kanda-ku, entertained a large party of friends at a Chinese dinner at the Y.M.C.A. Sunday evening.

The guests of honor were Mr. S. C. Chao, Mr. L. J. Wang, and Mr. T. L. Lee, all special commissioners of the Shansi railways.

Other guests included Mr. Soichi Saito, national general secretary of the Japanese Y.M.C.A.; Mr. S. Yedo of the Foreign Office, Mr. G. S. Phips, Dr. and Mrs. Gilbert Bowles, Mr. and Mrs. Jorgenseon, Mr. Russell Durgin, Rev. Mr. T. D. Walser, Dr. Brasek, Mr. and Mrs. Takahara, Mr. Wieghton, Mr. Minom Sunada, head of the Japanese-Chinese Educational Society, and Dr. Margot Grzywacz, instructor of German in the National Shantung University, Tsingtao, China.

Dr. Grzywacz who has been at Shantung University for four years, formerly spent a year in Japan. Following the dinner Sunday evening, she left for Tsingtao, her brief vacation having ended.

There are now about 3,000 Chinese students in Japan, twice the number there were last year, Mr. Lee, host at the dinner party, said. These 3,000 students, though scattered throughout Japan, have affiliation with the Chinese Y.M.C.A. in Kanda which is more than 40 years old.

Several of the leaders of China have at one time or another, been general secretary of the Chinese Y.M.C.A. in Tokyo. These include Mr. C. T. Wang, foreign minister of China, and Mr. Kung, now minister of education.

In years past, the number of Chinese students in Japan far exceeded that of the present day, Mr. Lee explained, but the number is again increasing. The favorable exchange rate accounts for this increase, he said.

The old Chinese Y.M.C.A. burned in the earthquake. The present structure, which was put up as a temporary headquarters, was built largely through contributions of Japanese friends.

Bulgarian King Causes Fall Of Fascist Clique

Boris Regains Old Supremacy As Loyal Military Chiefs Form New Cabinet

Restoration of King Boris is how the sudden Cabinet change which was effected on Jan 22 is described in Sofia, says a despatch from the Bulgaria capital to the Christian Science Monitor dated Jan. 23.

The article continues:

Monarchists are considered to have won a complete victory over the so-called Republicans. The power of that invisible factor, Col. Lamyan Veltcheff, who though holding no official position governed Bulgaria from behind the scenes, is believed to have been eliminated.

Colonel Veltcheff was head of a small group of Fascist idealists known as Zveno which seized the power May 19, 1934, with the help of the army and forced the King to submit to their dictation.

Army Officers Named

It is noteworthy that the new Cabinet also consists largely of army officers, but they are are all considered unqualifiedly loyal to King Boris.

The principal issue over which the Georgieff Cabinet fell was that of diminishing or increasing the King's authority.

Two of the outgoing group are regarded as out-and-out Republicans—namely Colonel Veltcheff himself and Peter Todoroff, Finance Minister.

In the new Cabinet not only do loyal army officers hold the portfolios of Education, Interior and War, as well as the Premiership, but they control the Ministries of Communications and Finance behind the scenes. The latter post, for instance, is held by the brother of one of the officers who organized the recent coup.

The Foreign Minister remains the same as in the Georgieff Cabinet. In an exclusive interview with the Monitor he declared the army is absolutely united and King Boris revered by the whole nation.

In a declaration to the press, the Foreign Minister said that Bulgaria would follow the same external and internal policy as before. This means there will be no change regarding the establishment of friendly relations with its neighbors. There is reason to believe the Macedonian revolutionary organization will not be allowed a survive. The Government will also be relentless in its attempt to stamp out Communism, which seems to be growing in importance.

In view of adverse criticism from Geneva, it is expected the economic program will be modified.

New Government

General Zlateff announced the new Cabinet as follows:

Premier and War—Gen. Petko Zlateff.

Premier and War—Gen. Petko Zlateff.

Foreign Affairs—Kosta Bataloff.

Education—Gen. T. Radeff.

Ariculture—Prof. Yanki Moloff.

Agriculture—Prof. Yanki Moloff.

Railways—Nicholas Kaharieff.

Justice—Michael Kalendaroff.

Flaince—M. Obrejkoff.

The Georgieff coup last May was made effective by a military revolution called the "Captains' Revolution," because most of the prime movers were captains, many of them out of jobs. Colonel Veltcheff himself was a former head of the military academy of Bulgaria.

For the most part the Zveno organization was largely composed of men of no political importance. But all were regarded as well intentioned and patriotic and their organization came to be known as ardently Fascist, although the movement is not set up with any such completeness as is found in Italy and Germany.

In its beginning the new regime was hailed with enthusiasm by the rank and file of the people because the political corruption of the state had aroused anger and unrest on all sides. Generally it was felt that the new Fascism could not be worse than the so-called "democratic" order which it replaced and the hope was that it might prove better.

Recently an extensive Communist conspiracy was reported to have been uncovered by the Government through the police in the city of Haskovo. More than 300 were arrested—some of them soldiers. The story was that the conspirators planned to seize the arms depot in Haskovo, distribute weapons among the local Communists, take possession of army barracks and to develop a movement strong enough eventually to overthrow the Government.

The plot seems to have had ramifications in several cities and so many people are being held by the police in connection with it that local administration buildings have to be used as prisons.

It is significant that this large group of Communists has been found in the very city where 46 persons were on trial for their lives because of another Communist plot. Recently six Communists were hanged in Bulgaria, and scores of others condemned to death. It is noted that, as the repressive measures of the Government increase in severity, the activity of the Communists also seems to grow.

Some time would be required, however, before the service could be in full operation. Once congressional approval has been obtained it would require a year to build the ship. After that the question of obtaining a trained personnel will cause further delay. Dr. Eckener has estimated that three years is a minimum time necessary to train officers for large size airship service.

Presidential indorsement of the American-built airship scheme is considered a death blow to the hopes of the seadrome or giant floating dock plan for facilitating transoceanic air transport. The aviation commission, it is understood, recommends it for further study, particularly should the airship prove unsatisfactory. But seadromes are not only considered unnecessary if airships are used, but also a large segment of the airship industry feels that the possibilities of stratosphere flight are so near to being realized that seadromes would be obsolete within another two or three years.

The Sikorsky Company, for example, has already complete plans for a giant flying boat which would travel at altitudes of between 18,000 and 30,000 feet where, it is contended, ideal weather conditions are constant and speeds greatly in excess of anything now known, are possible. With such ships, it is argued that seadromes would be useless since a stratosphere plan would gain nothing by coming down in mid-ocean.

Miss Earhart Expects Line

Miss Amelia Earnhart declared that this year would see the inauguration of a regular passenger transport line from the mainland to Hawaii.

The noted woman flier visualized the line equipped with a man-made island, located midway on the route, and with the radio beam, by which pilots maintain their course through the stormiest skies.

She made these statements aboard he liner Lurline, where she went to meet her husband, George P. Putnam, New York publisher, who left Honolulu shortly after Miss Earhart began her solo flight across the long water trail to Oakland, Calif.

The mainland-Hawaii line needs only "deveopments and refinements" to start operating now, Miss Earhart said. Within the year, it will be running regularly, she said.

In her opinion, the artificial island could easily be constructed in the Pacific, and used as a re-fueling station and as a post for the dissemination of weather reports to the transport pilot.

"And the planes would have to be as much at home in the ocean as in the air," she said. "Which is no problem of construction any longer."

She said the radio beam would be "absolutey necessary," but described it as being merely a development of the one now in use at Oakland, Calif., which has a range of between 100 and 200 miles.

And then she turned her eyes westward, and predicted the establishment of a transport line between Hawaii and the Philippine Islands. "It would need two islands stationed along the course, and a longer beam," she said.

Seeking Origin Of Races, Science Tries New Trail

Sinanthropus cannot claim to be the ancestor of the yellow races.

Likewise with Piltdown Man. In spite of his ape-like mandible, this million-year-old Englishman may yet turn out to be an early Caucasian or "white-man."

There is one great American who will not be surprised to know that European anthropologists are now applying the doctrine of parallel or independent evolution to explain the emergence of the modern races of mankind. Dr. Osborn, formerly president of the American Museum of Natonal History and the doyen of the world's paleontologists, has done more than any one to establish the truth of the doctrine of parallel evlution.

Dr. Osborn's Work

In studying the evolution of horses, elephants and of many other kinds of mammals, he has found animals in one country going through a series of evolutionary changes, and then observed that the same changes have been undergone by animals living in a distant country or in another period of geological time. But in all such cases of parallel evolution he found reason to believe that the animals which underwent the same evolutionary changes, although living in different countries or at different periods of time, were descended from a common ancestral stock. Dr. Osborn has therefore inferred that the new features which become manifest under such circumstances have been present as a "latent" characteristic of the common ancestor.

This is likely to prove true in the evolution of the modern races of mankind. We must suppose that the diverse and primitive forms of mankind. We must suppose that the diverse and primitive forms of humanity, which were in existence in different parts of the earth at the beginning of the pleistocene period, are traceable to a remote common ancestor. The theory of parallel evolution compels us to suppose that in this remote common ancestor there were latent certain evolutionary tendencies. These tendencies became manifest in recent times and converted early and primitive forms of humanity into "modern" races. We have still much to learn concerning the modes in which progressive evlution works its changes in living types.

Thus it does seem, as a result of discoveries made in recent years, that we shall have to change our ideas concerning the origin of the living races of mankind. Parallel evolution is to prove to be a much stronger factor in the production of new races and new species of mankind than we have suspected hitherto. Yet, even supposing that this new idea proves to be true, the cousinship of the living races of mankind is as valid as ever.

The only difference, if the theory holds, is this: We shall have to suppose that all modern races—white, yellow, brown and black—separated from each other at a much earlier stage of their evolution and at a much earlier period of time than we have hitherto believed. Instead of searching for the common ancestor of modern races in midpleistocene times, we must seek for him in mid-pliocene times—which means transferring our search 2,000,000 years further back.

Swedish Groups Combat Sharp Fall In Birth Rate

The uninterrupted decline in the Swedish birth rate, which fell from 29.4 per thousand in 1880 to 15.4 in 1930, has been forced to the forefront of politics by the Conservative party's bill urging the Riksdag to appoint a commission to consider the whole population question.

On Jan. 10 it was announced that the Swedish town of Oerebro had the lowest birth rate in the world—6.39 per thousand according to the New York Times. Since 1913 the number of school children in Oerebro has fallen from 808 to 284, a decline of 66½ per cent.

The Conservative bill recommends increasing the tax-exemption limit for breadwinners with large families, discuss the possibility of revising the present system of mothers' pensions and infant welfare and raises the question of improved housing at reasonable cost.

How US Security Program Operates For Youth Of 20

A store clerk who goes to work at the age of 20 in January, 1937, and earns $100 a month until he is 65 will get a monthly pension of $49 from then until he dies, under the plan introduced on Jan. 17 by Senator Wagner in Washington.

During that time he will pay 50 cents a month for the first five years, $1 a month for the next five, $1.50 a month for the next five, $2 a month for the next five and $2.50 a month for the next twenty-five years, according to the New York Times. His employer will have made similar payments for him.

The two will have paid a total of $2,150.

Insurance actuaries have figured out that the average young man of 20 may be expected to live just a litte less than a year beyond 65.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Birthplace Of The Calendar

The Julian Calendar introduced in 45 B.C. was found inaccurate because its year was too long. In the 16th century it had fallen 10 days in arrear and a reform was ordered by the Council of Trent in 1563. Even before Gregory XIII was elected Pope, a Commission, headed by Aloigi Giglio, went to work on the project, but it was hampered by lack of space. After the election, Gregory proceeded to build the palace of the Quirinale for the purpose of housing the Commission. It was here that the most famous mathematicians of the time headed by Clavius, Chocon, Sepulveda and others finally completed the calculations which in 1582 enabled Gregory XIII to institute the Reformed Calendar which we are using today.

The Quirinale named after one of the seven hills of Rome has been the residence of the Italian Kings since 1870.

WOMEN'S CLUB SEES PEARL FILM, FACTORY

The Tokyo Women's club saw the intricate processes which lie behind a pearl necklace Monday when members were shown through the Mikimoto factory at Uchisaiwai-cho and enjoyed a film of the Mikimoto pearl industry at the main store of the company on the Ginza.

It was the first time that the pearl factory was opened to outsiders, according to Mrs James H. Course, corresponding secretary of the club who had arranged the meeting which was under the auspices of the art committee of which Mrs. Russell Durgin is chairman. Mrs. J. D. Hitch and Mrs. W. P. Davies presided as the club was divided into two groups—one saw the films as the other group toured the factory.

Mr. R. Yokohama, head of the foreign department of the store, and Mr. K. Ideka, the general manager, greeted the members, answered questions, and were generally responsible for the successful meeting. At the factory, guides showed the visitors about, explaining the processes.

Motion pictures of the pearl industry showed girl divers gathering young oysters at certain seasons, workers inserting bits of mother of pearl into these oysters so that an irritation would be set up which would make the pearl, the hanging of these oysters in wire baskets under water where they are kept for six years, the extraction of the pearls, and the boring and stringing processes.

Mr. Kokichi Mikimoto, the "Pearl King," who worked on the culture pearl process for 30 years before he perfected the process, was shown in one of the films.

At the factory, the Tokyo Women's club saw how the artists' designs for the jewelry were transported to metal, the cuttings and sawings of the metal designs, the melting of the platnum and white gold, the stamping of the metal plates, the first polishing of various precious stones, the processes of pearl and diamond stringing, the final cleaning and polishing of the jewelry and the composition on which the jewel work is carried on.

Members saw jewelry in all stages of completion and they watched as intricate and fine bits of platinum was hammered out and jewels were inserted. Beautiful brooches and necklaces were being almost completed.

A feature of the exhibits at the Mikimoto store on the Ginza was the pagoda of mother of pearl and countless single pearls which was sent to America for the Sesquicentenial exhibition in Philadelphia in 1926. After the meeting was concluded, many members of the club lingered to enjoy the wealth of exhibits at the Ginza store.

The meeting next Monday will be a visit to the Columbia Gramophone factory in Kawasaki. Members are to meet at the Kawasaki station at 2:30 p.m. The library will be open from 1 to 2 p.m. next Monday and from 4 to 6 p.m. this Thursday.

Germany's Rearming Rouses Europe's Fears

war. Modern war, the redoubtable Professor Banse of Braunschweig has written, is a matter of poison gases, steel, electricity and, above all, poisonous bacteria. Under such conditions Storm Troopers would be necessary at home to preserve unity and discipline.

Philosophy and manpower, however, do not in themselves insure success in modern war. Money and machines are also necessary. And the Germans, renowned for more than fifty years for the excellence of their industrial apparatus and their creative ability in the sciences, are working as never before to turn out the machines which men need today to kill one another.

The German budget for 1934-35 contains an appropriation of $357,600,000 for the army and navy—an increase of $89,000,00 over the previous year—and a grant to the Air Ministry of $83,000,000, compared with $28,000,000 in 1933-34. For the first time there is also a provision of $100,000,000 for the Storm Troopers and the Labor Service Army.

Yet these provisions do not suffice to picture the armament activity now going on in Germany. The production and importation of materials necessary in armament production has increased at an astounding pace since Hitler came into power. The production of pig iron, which in 1932 amounted to 3,900,000 tons, rose to 5,200,000 tons in 1933 and in the first nine months of 1934 totaled 6,237,301 tons. Steel production for 1934 was recently estimated at 11,800,000 tons, a 104 per cent increase over 1932, the last year before Hitler came into power. The figure put Germany far ahead of both Great Britain and France, despite their superior military and naval establishments, in the production of steel. Though the increased output cannot be attributed exclusively to intensified munitions activity, a major part was devoted to military uses.

War Material Imports

While Germany has reduced her total imports and attempted to erect substitute industries within the Reich, imports of materials used in the manufacture of munitions have jumped, as shown in the following table:

Imports	1932	1933
	— (Tons) —
Iron	171,000	431,000
Iron ore	3,400,000	4,580,000
Nickel	2,900	4,400
Nickel ore	17,000	34,000
Copper	175,000	207,000
Cellulose wood	1,200,000	2,400,000
Bauxite	200,000	240,000

The factories of the Third Reich are beehives of armament preparation. Stringent laws prohibit employes from divulging the activities of the plants in which they work.

Innumerable reports from Germany testify to the increased munitions production in the Krupp, I. G. Dye Trust and Thysssen works. In Wismar a new Dornier airplane factory is being built. The Siemens factories are increasing their output of airplane motors. Blohm and Voss, the shipbuilders in Hamburg, are also working at high pressure in the armament field. In many factories tension exists between workers employed in ordinary peacetime pursuits and those employed in the armament branches whose pay is higher.

In many parts of the Reich fortifications, barracks, landing fields and anti-aircraft guns are being constructed. And in the laboratories scientists are experimenting with poison gases, high explosives and the possibilities of bacteriological warfare.

The question of airplanes recently caused a serious debate in the House of Commons. On Nov. 28 Winston Churchill painted a vivid picture of incendiary bombs dropping on London from German airplanes.

Although Mr. Churchill and Stanley Baldwin, the government spokesman, could not agree on the number of airplanes now in German possession, the Lord President of the Council admitted that there might be 1,000. According to the Treaty of Versailles Germany is not supposed to possess military airplanes, but it is common knowledge that Germany's excellent commercial planes could be transformed into military machines on very short notice.

If the revelations in Washington during the Senate munitions investigation are to be believed, the Third Reich is thinking not only in terms of ground and air forces but once again in terms of submarines. In addition, the entire economic structure of the Third Reich is being erected on military foundations. For in case of war Germany wants to be self-sufficient. Her greatest hopes in time of war would lie with her powerful industries. Chancellor Hitler's friendship with the great industrialists is based in part upon their importance to "the nation in arms" of which he has so often spoken.

During the World War Germany learned that a nation which expects to fight must be able to sustain itself with food and raw materials if it is to gain victory. Today Hitler and Schacht are copying the steps taken in 1914-18 by Walter Rathenau, whose organization of the Reich's economic resources enabled Germany to hold out for four bitter years.

"Only a Beginning"

What is going on in Germany today is only a beginning. The foundations of a vast military edifice have been laid. But now the time has come when the real construction job can only be done in the open.

In the meantime German rearmament must be viewed as part of the whole European pattern. Today France is superior to Germany in military equipment, and the allies of France are also armed "to the teeth." With every advance in rearmament made in Germany a similar development follows in those countries. Germany may have military secrets, but France and her allies have spies. And in addition France has one great ally within Germany which would help put the brakes on a Nazi "military adventure." That ally is social and economic distress, or, potentially, social revolution.

Leading British Banker Foresees Further Gains

Midland Bank Chairman Ascribes Gains To A Managed Currency

Predicting that Great Britain would continue to show further gains provided that the pound stays off gold, Reginald McKenna, chairman of the Midland Bank and former Chancellor of the Exchequer, told shareholders recently that the home market had not yet reached its limit and asserted that the "crisis had been overcome", says the Christian Science Monitor.

"Now that sterling is free to find its own level in relation to foreign currencies, old restrictions on our power of development are removed," he said. "There is now no need for deflationary pressure to be put upon us as on the countries of the gold bloc."

Policy Aids Recovery

"This holds true for the whole sterling group, which transacts a very large share of the world's trade and in which this monetary policy has already brought about a substantial measure of recovery. It is difficult to find any reason why continuance of the monetary policy of the past three years should not yield equally favorable results."

Mr. McKenna stated that while imports must be stimulated, these need not be paid for by increased exports.

"Quite apart from the fact that increased imports come largely from countries within the sterling area," he declared, "our heavier purchases from abroad facilitate the payment of interest on our overseas investments. In the aggregate our balance of payments is substantially unchanged."

He also denied that the decline of sterling in terms of gold showed that Britain is importing more than she could afford.

"Actually, it is stering prices that have kept stable while prices of gold have fallen," he asserted. Hence the depreciation of the gold value of sterling does no more than mark the rising value of gold.

Benefits of Off-Gold Policy

"These facts illustrate very forcefully the striking benefit resulting from our departure from gold. Under the old system this decline of sterling—which is not indicative of any weakening of our international position—would nevertheless have necessitated deflationary measures in order to protect the gold stock, and those measures would have had depressing effects on our internal trade.

"Now, however, reflation, except as a corrective of internal inflation has been banished as an unnecessary, discredited instrument of a freely operative monetary policy. There is at present no evidence of inflation.

"Our price level is steady and there is no extravagant stock exchange speculation on borrowed money. Accordingly no reason can be found for reversing the monetary policy which has proved so successful in the past three years."

US Is Advised To Keep Hands Off In Cuba

Foreign Policy Association Recommends A 'New Deal' For Its Affairs

A "new deal" in Cuba through a far-reacing program of social and economic reconstruction is recommended in the report of the Commission on Cuban Affairs, which was recently made public at New York by the Foreign Policy Association.

It stressed the importance of agrarian reform and agricultural diversification; urge the Washington Administration to "apply the spirit of nonintervention recently adopted at the Montevideo Conference" in its relation to Cuba; considered the adoption of the Estrada policy of recognition and the surrender of its naval base at Guantanamo, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

Likewise, it favors a new policy of restricting the use of United States marines, in time of threatened trouble, "to the specific purpose of evacuating foreigners from a few port cities in disturbed areas."

The reports in the form of a volume of more than 500 pages and was prepared by a commission headed by Raymond Leslie Buell, president of the Foreign Policy Association, and financed by a grant of the Rockefeller Foundation. The survey was made at the request of the Cuban Government.

Ten Vital Recommendations

Ten outstanding recommendations are contained in the report. They call for acquistion by the Cuban Government of land to develop small holdings, compensation for the land so taken to be made in internal bonds or cash; development of a program of agricultural diversification through the establishment of farm colonies, promotion of agricultural research and education, creation of a marketing organization under government auspices and the adoption of a scientific tariff policy.

It calls for soil survey to provide a scientific basis for diversified agriculture, forestry and dairying and for the development of independently owned farms.

It favors enactment of legislation requiring sugar planters to set aside lands on which their workers may produce food and the appointment of a full-time sustenance manager to develop food production, and it urges an international sugar agreement under which leading sugar importing countries would agree to adopting the quota system of the United States and under which the Jones-Costigan Act and the Chadbourne Plan would be extended.

"The chief purpose of such an agreement would be to increase the world price of sugar," it holds. Unless such a price rise is had, only about one-half the Cuban mills will be able to make interest on their investment, it adds.

The commission would tax unused land to encourage the development of 1,000,000 acres of uncultivated areas now in private hands and levy a progressive export tax on sugar to increase the revenue and put a brake on undue expansion of sugar following marked price increase.

It is for the establishment of an agricultural bank "to encourage diversification and local co-operative associations," and for the adoption of a dollar-exchange currency system.

It recommends establishment of a public utilities commission with jurisdiction over light, power, telephones, railways and highways.

Fears U. S. Influence

While the commission praises the efforts of the Roosevelt Administration to assist Cuba in the economic field, the report says a widespread antagonism toward the United States exists on the island. It arises out of the belief that, despite the abrogation of the Platt Amendment, "the State Department still makes and unmakes Cuban governments." It voices the hope that "the ambiguous activities of American diplomats in influencing the internal composition of the Government will come to an end."

Credit is given to the Roosevelt Administration for having "saved the Cuban economy from further collapse." Despite this, however, it adds, Cuba remains the scene of increasing disorder because the political problem has not been solved. The problem is seen as based on a physical and orderly liquidation of a controversial regime.

"It is not for a foreigner to prescribe the formula by which the provisional government of Cuba may be peacefully terminated," it says, "but unless this problem is solved, the prospect for peace, as well as for reconstruction, is not bright."

The survey discloses that "about a quarter of the wage-earning population is unemployed," and that "the masses in Cuba did not average more than $250 income a year, both in cash and goods." Meanwhile their food is "at an absolute maintenance minimum." More than one-half the population is illiterate, and few schools exist in the country districts, it adds.

The commission found that general conditions have "given rise to widespread social unrest," with the result that "although the Communist Party in Cuba has only a few thousand members, Communism exercises an influence over several hundred thousand workers and a large number of intellectuals."

If conditions on the island continue to "degenerate," it holds that "Communism may become strong enough to bring Cuba to chaos."

The commission found a strong demand in Cuba for a policy of monetary inflation. It voices the view, however, that "the net result of such a policy would be an exploitation of the Cuban worker in the interest of foreign, as well as domestic, enterprises. It is against the establishment of a Cuban central bank, holding that such an institution "would amount to little more han an engine of inflation."

The report gives considerable space to the dispute between the Chase National Bank in New York and the provisional government in Havana over the loans by the bank to the Government of Gen. Gerardo Machado. These loans have been repudiated

Holds Bank Was Unwise

While the commission holds it is not in a position of the validity of these loans under Cuban or international law, it voices the belief "that the Chase bank did not use sound business judgment in entering into these financial arrangements, and that in securing this business, it employed methods which overstepped the bounds of sound public policy and banking ethics."

It recommends to the Cuban Government that should it indorse the views of the lawyer's commission that the Chase loan was illegally contracted and does not constitute a binding obligation, it "should express willingness to refer the matter to adjudication by the Permanent Court of International Justice at the Hague or some other international tribunal.

"The second alternative is for the Cuban Government to negotiate a settlement with the Chase bank, taking into account Cuba's present economic situation, the conditions under which the loan was originally negotiated and the use to which it was put," it says.

With a temperature of 73 degrees Farenheit below zero, Iroquois Falls, Ont., a paper manufacturing town 200 miles north of North Bay, came close today to the all-time Canadian low record.

That record was established in December, 1910, when the thermometer fell to 78½ degrees below zero at Good Hope, a Hudson's Bay Company trading post on the Mackenzie River.

These other minimum temperatures marked Winter's most intensive siege:

Most Bulgarians Favor Regime Restoring Boris

General Belief Is That Nation Would Have Suffered If King Were Lost

The enforced retirement of those leaders in the dictatorial regime established last May who were hostile or doubtful in their allegiance to the Crown appears to have been received with relief and thanksgiving by most Bulgarians. It is the general belief that the country would have been brought into dire peril by the loss of its King, whose popular personality is a recognized national asset, according to the Sofia correspondent of The Times, London. Whether King Boris was again in imminent danger during recent weeks is a question which few are yet prepared to answer offhand. But the fear of a conspiracy against his person seems undoubtedly to have been present, and was reflected, according to popular rumor, in certain precautionary dispositions.

The powerful group of Army officers which has now brought about that downfall of such known anti-Monarchists as Colonel Damian Veltcheff and M. Petar Todoroff, the late Minister of Finance, is identical in the main with that which helped them into the saddle nine months ago. But at that time public resentment was running strongly against the muddling mis-government of the old political parties, and had begun to turn against the King himself for his continued tolerance of the party system. Colonel Veltcheff, the organizer of the 1923 coup d'Etat, again had a military organization in readiness, and was swept into power, along with the Zveno group of reformers, on a wave of popular and military discontent.

Treatment of The King

The King was kept under restrain virtually as a palace-prisoner till July, but then began to appear again in public and was eagerly acclaimed. As the King's popularity mounted, that of Colonel Veltcheff and the Zveno reformers declined. Their antagonism against the King was held up against them; they were charged with being Yugoslav integralists—in other words, with aiming at an early union with Yugoslavia instead of merely at a close rapprochement; and they offended rural sentiment by introducing a spirit monopoly and urban sentiment by their restriction of trade. The conviction grew that the Zveno regime would not be capable of refashioning the State.

At the end of December Colonel Veltcheff and his friends produced a plan for setting up a Council of State which would have rendered the King powerless. This only increased their unpopularity in the country and the Army. They seem still to have been trying at the eleventh hour to gain full control of the Cabinet by appropriating the Ministries of War and the Interior, but the Army group was already against them. The officers of two Sofia battalions gave the King a carefully planned ovation in the presence of Colonel Veltcheff and his Ministerial allies, much to their consternation, at the Orthodox New Year's Eve celebration in the Officers' Club on January 13. After having waited for the Bulgarian delegation to return from Geneva, a deputation of officers went to Colonel Kimon Gheorghieff, the late Prime Minister, on Tuesday and requested him to resign.

The Late Prime Minister

Much sympathy is felt for Colonel Gheorghieff, who had proved himself an effective and capable Prime Minister. But he was bound hand and foot to Colonel Veltcheff and M. Petar Todoroff, and had failed to provide himself with organized support in the country. He is understood to have refused an offer of the Ministry of Justice from General Zlateff, the new Prime Minister.

The new Cabinet rests, like its predecessor, on military support. That is its inherent weakness. There seems to be no question of reintroducing the former party system, to which the Army remains irreconcilably opposed, but the regime will try to create a political organization in the country as its permanent backing. The Press is already being allowed to discuss the form that this organization should take; at this early stage the idea of a single State Party seems to hold the field. In general newspapers have been granted much greater freedom, subject to the proviso that they shall not praise the old party system or recommend a return to it. People are discussing politics in the streets and cafes of Sofia with a freedom unknown during the last nine months, and their relief is obvious.

Long Seizes Rule Over Baton Rouge

New Council Is Named As Senator Calls City His 'Little District Of Columbia

Senator Huey Long on Jan. 23 replied to the challenge of his dictatorship by the militant "Square Deal Association" by taking control of the city of Baton Rouge, home port of the anti-Long organization, to make it his "Little District of Columbia." The association replied late the same day with the statement it would continue the fight against the Senator's dictatorship.

Disregarding protests and the defiance of the thirteen elected police jurors of East Baton Rouge Parish, Mr. Long, after his sudden return from Washington, had his Governor, O. K. Allen, commission an equal number of jurors under one of his dictatorial laws and set up the State capital's City Council to administer parish affairs, according to the New York Times.

He then had the Governor commission Eugene Cazedessus, Baton Rouge banker, as State coordinator to sit as a member of the City Commission Council to replace Lowers Higginbotham, Commissioner of Streets and Parks, whose job Mr. Long abolished with a legislative act.

Then Mr. Long was whisked up the elevator and mounted the upper fights of stairs to the observation platform of his thirty-three-story skyscraper Capitol Building and surveyed "his Capitol Hill."

From the windswept height the "dictator" pointed a steady finger to Church Street, leading from the business section of the State's capital city into the sunken gardens of the Capitol grounds.

Plans to Move School

He said he was going to widen Church Street and make it a "Pennsylvania Avenue" of his "Little District of Columbia," move the Catholic Brother School to the old campus of Louisiana State University to make room, and cut the street straight through to the State House.

"You see that lake and that land over there?" Mr. Long asked, pointing to the north to a tract of land owned by Louisiana State University.

"Well, we're going to build a bridge over the lake and develop that land."

He explained that this project would provide the estimated $100,000 needed to build the "Pennsylvania Avenue," asserting that the land could be improved and sold off at a profit of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The "Square Deal Association" statement late today asserted that the fight would continue against Senator Long regardless of a compromise on the oil refining tax announced by Mr. Long and the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana under which the oil company would receive a rebate on the tax imposed by the special session of the Legislature in December.

The determination to battle for the repeal of Mr. Long's "dictator laws" was announced by Ernest J. Bourgeois, president of the "Square Deal Association."

The association, organizing military units in the State, had its first company of "shock troops," a Baton Rouge contingent, in parade here Saturday afternoon.

Whether Mr. Long succeeds in his conquest over the hostile local reigning heads of Baton Rouge and the parish will be determined in any resistance offered by members of the elected contingent of police jurors who oppose alliance with him.

Support for him from some of the present elected members would give the Senator a majority to decide all questions in his favor.

Trade Reciprocity Called Disastrous For Philippines

adhere to our present currency system, thus making it impossible for us to execute any covenant with other countries for the purpose of looking for new markets and at the same time would be an obstacle to the neutralization with other countries which, otherwise, would be feasible.

"Aside from the principal difficulty in securing the consent of the different countries in favor of the neutralization of the Philippine Islands when the opportune time comes, by reason of such trade reciprocity, the retention by the United States of naval reservations and fueling stations after independence, would create another difficulty inasmuch as same privileges may be claimed by other nations before signing a neutrality agreement for, as the Japanese Consul Kimura has put it:—

"For Japan to agree to the neutralization of the Philippine Islands would be to tacitly agree to protect the Philippines against any violation of the neutrality of the Philippine Islands — What would Japan stand to gain by going to war to protect the neutrality of the Islands?" (Manila, Tribune, February 28, 1933.)"

Conclusion

"The matter of future trade reciprocity with the United States is a very delicate and serious problem of immediate and far-reaching consequence. Hence, we should take time in pondering seriously upon this matter. If steps leading to trade reciprocity with the United States will be taken and if any covenant or treaty shall be made in connection therewith, I am of the opinion that in no case should it exceed the transition period, for during this time which is supposed to be for economic adjustment and preparation, I think that our energy should be directed to one goal and that is, as much economic independence as possible during and after the Commonwealth.

"Whether or not, future trade reciprocity with the United States must continue after independence, is a matter which should be considered later on. In other words, whether circumstances would require free trade reciprocity, with the United States after independence, should depend upon the results of experiment and experience which we will have during the transition period. From such lesson and experience should be based our future economic relation with the United States. In conclusion, permit me to suggest certain propositions to those that are called upon to shape the destiny of our country not only during the transition period, but also once we are granted independence. These concrete propositions are as folows:—

(1) The maintenance of the quotas on our exports to the United States in accordance with the provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act.

"(2) Abolition of the graduated export tax as fixed in section 6 of the Tydings-McDuffie Act.

(3) Free trade reciprocity with the United States during the transition period only and if after that period it would be inevitable to have free trade relations with the United States for the mutual benefit of both countries, our export to the United States should be limited in such a way as to equal only the maximum import of the American goods to the Philippine Islands at the end of the transition period; contrary to the prevailing idea of compelling the Filipinos to buy such additional goods, the total amount of which, should equal the maximum amount of our exports to America. This policy of course, implies a gradual reduction of our exports to the United States specially sugar, but not upon other exports such as abaca, coconut, tobacco and other products which are only of insignificant amount compared with the total exportation of sugar.

"(4) Abolition of such mandatory provisions of the Tydings-McDuffie Act refering to restrictions from contracting foreign loans without the approval of the President of the United States, from enacting laws affecting currency, coinage, imports, exports and immigration and the supervision of our foreign affairs by the United States, Only by taking away these restrictions can we expect to prepare for a future independent economic existence. The continuance of these restrictive provisions in the Tydings-McDuffie Act would necessarily imply absence of freedom on the part of Filipinos to prepare for economic independence. In other words, they mean perpetual economic bondage to the United States. In view of the fact however, that the Commonwealth as well as an independent Philippines, would not be in a position in a generation at least or for many years yet to come, to have merchant marines of her own, there should be no objection in making any treaty with the United States giving preference to American steamers in the transportation of our goods from the Philippines to the ports of destination, specially those sent to America.

"(5) We should encourage our trade with Japan, China, Germany, Great Britain and Spain, they being the countries with whom we have been having considerable volume of trade in the past. This is specially so in connection with those goods which we can sell at present in the United States market profitably. The importation of goods from those countries on reciprocal basis should also be studied.

"(6) All efforts should be exerted in the production of such raw materials which we are at present importing from other countries and which can be profitably grown in the Philippine Islands and converted into manufactured products for local consumption or for export. At the same time, experiment should be made here in the production of certain raw materials which are needed by the United States and other countres for their own use, such as crude rubber and others.

"(7) Our other undeveloped natural resources such as the forest lands, fisheries, water powers and minerals should be given proper attention."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Mexican Santa Claus Is a Snake

In 1930 the Mexican Ministry of Education banished Santa Claus from Mexico by decree. The reason given was that the usual representation of the Christmas Saint swathed in furs and woolens and driving a sleigh is very incongruous in the mild Mexican climate, where snow is practically never seen. But to console the children, the Ministry appointed Quetzalcohuatl, an old Aztec God, to the position of Mexican Santa Claus. Quetzalcohuatl is popularly represented as a feathered snake, the symbol of the aboriginal deity of cheer and forerunner of Christianity.

President's Wife Assuming Role Of His Assistant

Observers Believe Mrs. Roosevelt Close To Being 2nd Chief Executive

One of the trends of the Roosevelt Administration to be noted by historians is the assumption of political duties by the wife of the President of the United States.

With the Constitution making no provision whatever for the duties of Presidents' wives, they have heretofore confined their activities largely to the social side of the White House.

The First Lady, in most cases, has felt she was doing well if she could keep up with the course of the Government through conversations she heard within the White House.

Those reputed to have exerted considerable influence in public affairs usually operated behind the scenes through the President. It was only by the chance disablement of her husband that the second Mrs. Woodrow Wilson came near to being a substitute President. However, Eleanor Roosevelt, more than any of her predecessors, comes close to being an Assistant President.

Work for New Deal

Once the outlines of the New Deal had been laid, some of its projects originated in Mrs. Roosevelt's councils. Without her backing, others would not have gone so far. It is because she is careful not to have it appear that her acts have anything official about them that the country generally can't put its finger on a project and say positively that it is Mrs. Roosevelt's idea. Any Federal worker knows, however, that a request from her is treated by the Departments with a degree of authority second only to one from the President himself.

One day the alert women reporters who "cover" Mrs. Roosevelt discovered that she had picked up the telephone and asked Agricultural Adjustment Administration officials why they could not feed the needy with the surplus litte pigs that had been ordered billed in the corn-hog curtailment program.

The reporters pinned her down with the question: "Is the new Federal Surplus Relief Corporation your idea?"

"Nothing is ever one person's idea," Mrs. Roosevelt replied.

Explaining that she could see no reason for destroying food when people were going hungry, she admitted she was "enormously interested" in the scheme.

Frequently she acts as a special unofficial field agent for the President. By her ability to go about with less fanfare and talk to persons in all walks of life, sound out sentiment and uncover abuses that otherwise might never be known to the White House, she is able to do much useful work.

Reedsville an Example

It was after Mrs. Roosevelt had made a visit to poverty-stricken shacks of West Virginia coal-miners near Reedsville and found abuses in the system of company-stores that there was written into the NRA coal-code a prohibition against the use of scrip and compulsory trade at company-stores.

The camps which took care of 3,000 girls in all parts of the country last summer were an outgrowth of Camp Tear, which was established in New York State for unemployed girls. Mrs. Roosevelt worked out the idea with Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor. It was one of the many Federal activities which Mrs. Roosevelt did not actually invent but which she has promoted in the East Room of the White House.

The organization-meeting for the Public Works of Art project she helped along by her attedance. She sent the NRA a statement in behalf of the small book-shop. The school-lunch program in the District of Columbia she helped improve. It has largely through her instrumentality that the alley-clearance bill for Washington was put through Congress after a twenty-year controversy.

The First Lady still wants to do something for the middle-aged woman who needs a job and for youths who have finished school only to face a jobless world. That the country is becoming increasingly conscious of her effectiveness is indicated by the enormous increase in the mail of the President's wife. A special staff at the Federal Emergency Relief Administration handles mail addressed to Mrs. Roosevelt along with that of the President.

Mrs. Roosevelt's governmental activities are approved by those who see in them altruism, sympathy for the downtrodden, and a great desire to serve others. Her activities are opposed by those who feel that she is not properly a public servant because she is not responsible to the American electorate or directly accountable to it at election-time.

This unprecedented part in the Government has led Mrs. Roosevelt into some ticklish places. In the Capital, she has found, one active in public affairs can not avoid collisions with politicians and "interests."

Twice she has had to go to the defense of the Reedsville homestead project against charges of Communism, once against Senator Thomas D. Schall, of Minnesota, and once against Dr. William Wirt. A magazine editor rejected her column in support of the Tugwell food and drug bill because its advertisers were against it.

Australia Fetes Her Rapid Gains Toward Recovery

Achievement During Last Four Years Is Celebrated On Foundation Day

Australia, which is not very different from the United States in size and climate, though with but 6,600,000 inhabitants, has, in recovering from trade depression, set an example in self-help of very wide application, says the Canberra correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

No country was harder hit by the slump. No country of corresponding significance—possibly excepting Japan which has adopted a comparable policy—has been more successful in winning its way back to conditions of economic stability. Australia is still confronted with hard times. Western Australia, the biggest of its sparsely inhabited states, finds its difficulties such that it has been agitating to be relieved of the costly responsibilities of federation. But the contrast between the general Australian situation now and what it was four years ago is astonishing.

Indications

In September, 1931, Australian Commonwealth credit, as shown by the price of 4 per cent Federal stocks, was on a basis of over 6 per cent. It is now little more than 3 per cent. Unemployment has been reduced from 30 per cent to 20 per cent. Overseas trade, despite extraordinarily low prices for Australian produce in world markets, has increased materially. Exports have gone up from £79,000,000 in 1931-32 to £97,000,000 last year. Imports in the same period have risen from £44,000,000 to £59,000,000. At the same time the Federal budget has been balanced, and Australia from falling each year deeper and deeper into debt, has been paying its way, while its commodity balance of annual trade has become more than sufficient to cover all public interest charges overseas.

The improvement in Australian credit has been such that the Commonwealth Government has been able to put through debt conversion operations on a scale sufficient to very materially reduce the deadweight of annual debt-charges upon the revenue.

Australia's recovery dates from 1931. A carefully regulated devaluation of the currency was then adopted as a settled policy. The rate of exchange as first fixed was 30 per cent below sterling parity. Later on, about the time that sterling was itself devalued in relation to gold, the Australian pound was brought down further. Since then Australian exchange—in common with that of New Zealand—has been kept at a uniform rate of approximately 25 per cent below sterling.

Economies Followed

Currency devaluation gave the hard-pressed Australian producer a much needed breathing space. But it was only part, and that the easiest portion, of the policy adopted. The other part consisted in most drastic economies in which heavy sacrifices were asked for and stanchly shouldered by every class of the community. Pensions, salaries and wages were heavily reduced all round.

A 20 per cent cut was effected in all adjustable Government expenditure. A 22½ per cent reduction of interest was made in internal governmental debts. Savings bank rates of interest on deposits and advances were lowered. Relief was given in respect of private mortgages. At the same time revenue was increased by raising the sales tax from 2½ per cent to 6 per cent of turnover.

The scheme was skilfully devised so that the burden should fall as equally as possible on everyone, and the public response it evoked was magnificent. The leaders of the Opposition in the Federal Parliament associated themselves with the Government in a great and successful effort to prevent default. So universal was the self-sacrifice displayed that all but 3 per cent of the holders of internal public debt agreed to exchange into conversion stock giving substantially lowered incomes.

Australia has thus established confidence firmly. It has also shown solidarity of national effort that has knitted its far-flung people more closely together than ever before.

Thomas Buckland, presiding at the last annual meeting of the Bank of New South Wales, the leading commercial banking institution in Australia, summed up the situation. The difficulties to be faced he said, were considerable, but there was no reason to suppose they were insuperable. If they were squarely met, Australia, in his opinion, could look forward with confidence to "prosperity surpassing anything known in the past and based upon more stable foundations."

Mr. Buckland's optimism is widely shared both in Sydney and in Melbourne. It is an optimism resting upon the solid basis of the big progress already made.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Where One Singer Can Be a Glee Club

In the plant of the Johns-Manville Co., in Manville, N. J. the engineers have constructed a room that is unbelievable. It is the "reverberation chamber," where many of its sound-deadening principles used in hospitals and offices have been discovered. Any noise within the room resonates for 12 seconds, and consequently a singer can be a quartet or octette all by himself. A man laughing sounds like thunder in a valley, and three men clapping their hands can make more noise than a full house in a theatre. Frank Luther, well-known radio star, sang 9 different tones and heard them reverberate exactly like 9 different voices.

Only Record By Brahms Goes To Reich Institute

The only existing phonograph record for which Johannes Brahms played the piano back in 1889, eight years before his death, has come into the possession of the Institute of Sound Research in Berlin.

When T. Wangemann, personal representative of Thomas A. Edison, came to Europe in that year, showing Edison's latest invention, Brahms consented to play a Hungarian dance for the strange contraption, says the New York Times.

The old silver record remained in private ownership until recently, when it was acquired by the institute. It is now preserved as a museum piece. Modern records have been made from it.

Warship Money Failed To Make Jobs, Is Claim

50,000 Admiral Land Says; Only 7,000 Reply Observers; Warning Sounded

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R) of Michigan, charged at the Senate Munitions Committee hearing on January 29 that the $28,000,000 allotted the Navy for warship construction "obviously has not served the purpose of furnishing employment for which the Public Works Administration was created," says the Washington correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

He drew this conclusion after Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chief of the bureau of construction and repair of the Navy Department, admitted that, because of delay in getting plans from private companies only $87,000,000 had been spent to Jan. 1. The Admiral estimated that 50,000 men had been given employment or kept at work through PWA expenditures, although committee investigators produced figures showing that in government yards there had been an increase of only 7000 jobs, some of which they attributed to shortening of the work week through the NRA codes.

Because of the increase in costs, Admiral Land estimated that another $50,000,000 or $45,000,000 will be needed to complete the construction of 32 ships authorized by the PWA in 1933.

The Navy has already received an additional $40,000,000 to construct 20 ships under the 1934 program.

Admiral Land testified that the progress in private yards in drawing the plans on which the Government is dependent is "not what we would like to have." He insisted, however that the Navy Department still has the "whip hand" over private companies.

In questioning Admiral Land, Senator Vandenberg said he was "trying to determine whether PWA funds are being spent for PWA purposes or for Navy purposes."

Later, the committee heard william Calvin, secretary of the metal trades division of the A. F. of L., report that he had heard a conversation in August, 1933, in which Lawrence R. Wilder chairman of the Board of Gulf Industries, a shipbuilding firm, was offered the services of a "fixer" in getting government contracts if he would pay $250,000.

Names Washington Attorney

The offer, Mr. Calvin said, came from a "Mr. Gravem," Washington attorney, who did not name the "fixer" but identified him as "one of the most influential citizens in Washington."

When Mr. Wilder commented that there might be an objection raised if there was evidence of collusion, Mr. Calvin quoted Mr. Gravem as saying that, by that time the keels of the vessels would be laid, and it would be too late to do anything. Mr. Wilder did not accept the bargain offer, Mr. Calvin said.

The committee has called Axel B. Gravem, a Washington lawyer, to testify tomorrow regarding Mr. Calvin's charges. Mr. Gravem, who was a prominent American Rhodes Scholar at Oxford University and is known as an attorney of probity and standing, denies the charges. He agrees that he once met Mr. Wilder, very briefly and suggested that he get in touch with a naval architect who might give him technical advice. He expressed complete disapproval of the Wilder projects, however.

Dern Utters Warning

Meanwhile, the House Military Affairs Committee took up a thread of the munition investigation with George H. Dern, Secretary of War, warning that nationalization of industry in time of war would be extremely dangerous. He did not except even the munitions industry.

Peacetime government manufacture of munitions "would probably remove any objectionable features that may have developed in connection with the munitions industry," he said, "but the result might at the same time be detrimental to the national defense."

The Secretary indorsed proposals to license the manufacture and sale of war supplies and advocated price control and an excess profits tax to help cut down war profits, though he warned against too heavy restrictions that would hamper production.

Miss Jeannette Rankin, first woman to serve in Congress, now connected with peace organizations, told the committee:

"If I were running the next war the President would receive the same wages as privates, and the member of Congress who voted for war would carry the flag into battle.'

Greek, Japanese Myths Discussed By Writer

their feelings to the outer world and are but little interested in it. Public affairs do not impress them, for their interest is concentrated on themselves and the family. In his seclusion in himself the Indian has surpassed all Eastern nations.

"No matter what we say about the Orient, we can say this with conviction, that the various differences between the East and West are not so much rooted in racial characteristics as due to educational differences. A change in the countries we have spoken of in the position of women will, we believe, produce a change in the psychology of the people and cause a turn in the direction towards biological competition and progress. Then the assimilation of western culture will be the outcome of a natural biological need. This represents our general impressions as received during three years of study in Persia, India and China."

Mr. Stoyanni then compared Greece and Japan in the following words:

"I am very glad to have the honor of being invited to this luncheon, and of giving my personal impressions of the contacts between two very ancient peoples of Asia and Europe—the Japanese and the Greeks. I think most European authors who have written about Japan in the last few years have paid attention only to the differences between these two countries and not to their resemblances. Lafcadio Hearn, who was Greek by his mother and born on the Greek island of Lefkay whence came his name Lafkadio), did not live in Greece and so did not know the Greek people well. Otherwise I am sure he would have found many resemblances between Japan and Greece to write about, and not only from the mythological point of view. Mythology was his playground. He said that the world first opened before him when he read about the gods and goddesses of ancient Greece.

"I think it is true that through mythology we can trace several positive elements of national character of a people. When reading books about the mythological origin of the Japanese people, my attention has drawn by the many resemblances to ancient Greek mythology.

"According to Japanese mythology the islands of Japan were created by the Goddess of the Sun, Amaterasu. In the same manner the Greek islands of Cyclades—meaning islands making a circle—were dispersed in the sea by the Father of all Greek gods, Zeus, in a circles round the little island of Delos, where Zeus was born at the top of Mount Quthos. The first inhabitants of Greece were created by Defkalion throwing behind him the stones taken from these islands. The first kings of the Protoellenic period, in prehistoric times, were descendants of the gods. Orpheus descended into hell to search for his wife Eurydice, just as in Japanese mythology Izaneki Nomikoto went down into hell to search for his wife.

"But apart from mythology, there are other recemblances between the Japanese and Greek peoples. Hospitality is considered an obligation by both. In all Greek villages a foreigner will find sincere hospitality. The manner of eating is somewhat similar. In Greek villages there are no tables and chairs, and people sit down on straw and eat at little low table, as they do in Japan—but we have not such good straw as your tatami.

In rural districts in Greece every house has its little shrine, a place where the holy pictures or pictures of holy persons are placed. These pictures are family relics, handed on from father to son and mother to daughter. A guest entering the house must first take off his hat before the shrine, salute, and make the sign of the cross; afterwards he can speak to his hostess. In every rural house in Greece there is also a special place of honour destined for his rank—like the Tokonami in Japan.

"It is a pity that all these ancient customs are gradually disapearing in Greece, though they are, happily, kept in Japan. Greece is also formed of islands, as is Japan and Greeks are like the Japanese largely naval people. The troubles in ancient and modern history have not changed the mind of the Greek people to any extent and they will remain faithful to old traditions as to origin, as do the Japanese. The Greek admire and respect nature, in the same manner as the Japanese.

"I have only stated the resemblances which I have observed during the short time I have been in Japan, but I hope a new Lafcadio Hearn will one day come and relate many others."

Miss Hutmann, professor of Modern History at Columbia University, then spoke as follows:

"I count it a happy augury that the first day I am in Tokyo I have the honor to sit among you at this luncheon. I come from a university, than which in the United States there is no other that cares more about friendship with all people. We are very busy there now cultivating an interesting new department under the head of a distinguished Japanese. He is the guardian of the cultural relations of Japan in Colombia university, and there is a collection of manuscripts and many things there.

"For myself I should like to say that I do not think it is enough to have important and significant meetings like this. It is personal friendships that must be cultivated, and I hope you will send your sisters and daughters to Colombia, as well as your brothers and sons. I am very happy to be in Japan."

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Humming Bird

The smallest of birds is only about 3 inches in length and weighs about half an ounce but its long narrow wings are operated by pectoral muscles which in relative size exceed those of any other bird. As a result, the humming bird is one of the swiftest things that fly and can cover more than a hundred feet a second with the greatest of eases, or more than a mile a minute. Its wings move with a speed that defies the human eye, it has the most perfect control of its wings, and is utterly fearless.

Knows People By Their Voice And Footsteps

Jake Robinson, familiarly known as "Blind Jake" by the residents of his home town, Dixon, Kentucky, has made himself well known by his uncanny ability to recognize anyone by the sound of voice or footsteps.

Recently Hall Henry, now a resident of New York, visited Dixon for the first time in fifteen years. While talking to two men on the street Mr. Henry noticed Blind Jake coming, and said he wanted to see if Blind Jake remembered him. "Yes, you are one of Mr. Henry's boys", answered Jake, although he had not heard Mr. Henry's voice for fifteen years. On a former visit to Dixon many years ago, Jake merely heard Mr. Henry walk across the street, and called to him by name although Mr. Henry hadn't been in town for two years.

Italy Faces Crisis In Silk Industry

Corporative System Fails In First Attempt To Solve Major Problem

All Italy is following with particular interest the first meetings of the recently constituted corporations. These, created to solve technical problems of production, constitute a distinguishing feature of the new political system inaugurated by the Fascist regime.

Of especial importance was the meeting of the corporation of the textile industries, declares Arnaldo Cortese in the New York Times. It considered means of relieving the silk industry, which at present is passing through a particularly difficult period, owing to a number of causes, but particularly to strong Japanese competition. Appeals for Government aid from the silk manufacturers have been particularly insistent.

Agricultural Income Cut

The terms of the problem can be easily stated. In 1926 Italy produced 43,000,000 kilograms of silk cocoons, selling at an average price of 30 lire. In 1933 production had dropped to 34,000,000 kilograms, selling at an average price of 5 lire. As silk cocoons are raised exclusively by peasant women, this means that agricultural incomes underwent a curtailment of more than 1,000,000,000 lire.

All parties interested in silk, from the peasant who raises the cocoons to the merchant who sells the finished product, were represented at meetings of the corporation of the textile industries.

The agriculturalists suggested that the government guarantee a minimum price for cocoons. The industrialists proposed that the bounty the government at present pays on silk yarns should be increased. Other proposals were that a heavy tax should be placed on the production of rayon, the roceeds to be used to subsidize the silk industry, and that silk should be mixed with wool in the manufacture of underwear.

All Plans Rejected

All these proposals were rejected. The suggestions that the government guarantee a minimum price for cocoons or increase the bounty on silk yarns were deemed too burdensome for the Treasury.

The proposal to lessen this burden by taxing rayon was unacceptable because it would have damaged one of the most flourishing Italian industries.

Nor was it deemed feasible to mix silk with wool in underwear because of the resulting increased cost in the finished product. Silk is still considerably more expensive than wool, even at its present extremely low prices.

The corporation therefore limited itself to counseling the interested parties to achieve a closer coordination of their efforts, perfecting technical and economic organization in the agricultural industries and commercial fields.

These recommendations failed to indicate any effective method of overcoming the crisis in the silk industry. Nevertheless, it is regarded as a fair sample of the functioning of the corporations. It is pointed out all groups interested in silk had the opportunity to set forth and discuss their ideas concerning what should be done.

British Believed Ready To Act Without Reich

Want Germany In Pacts But Would Back Them Without Her Is Report

Great Britain's backing of France, which had much to do with making possible the recent Italo-French accord and which seems the key to the present situation, developed very far during the League of Nations Council session just concluded, declares Clarence K. Streit in a Geneva despatch dated Jan. 22 to the New York Times.

The article continues:

How extensive and how permanent this development is none can say, but from well-informed British sources one gets the impression that the present position is as follows:

Great Britain has lifted her veto against having the Continental security pacts, notably the Eastern and the Austrian pacts, concluded without Germany. She is still striving hard to bring Germany into these pacts and back into the League. She wants thus to "crown" Russia's entry into the League and the Rome agreement. She would much prefer to have Germany in and looks with much misgiving on the erection of a system in which Germany is not included. To that end she has insisted, with success, that all the obligations in these pacts must be mutual.

But she is faced by the question of what is to be done if Germany still refuses to come in and voluntarily excludes herself from these reciprocal guarantees. Shall everything be dropped, and if so, what then? Or shall Europe go on without Germany?

Two Lines of Policy Sought

In these circumstances it will be sought at the coming Anglo-French talks in London to work out two lines of joint policy. One is based on the hypothesis that Germany comes in, the other is a program for going on anyway if she refuses.

This makes important the amount of time to be given Germany to answer definitely. There is no British disposition to hurry her. It is admitted that Oct. 14, when Germany's notice of withdrawal from the League expires, will be a serious date. But it is said this question must be settled definitely at least some weeks or months before that.

Germany will no doubt want to know what she is to get in the way of arms equality for entering these agreements. Will the London talks be concerned chiefly with how much to pay her? Why should any such price be paid to Germany? She gets from these pacts and the League covenant precisely what every one else in them gets—namely, guarantees of territorial security. What else did Britain herself get out of entering the Locarno pact? One gathers that although Britain has not given up all idea of armament limitation and equal rights, these things are not decisive factors at this stage.

Three Trouble Zones

If Germany stays out, does that mean further British commitments on the Continent? Apparently not. There are three trouble zones in Europe, it is explained—the Rhine, the Polish Corridor and Austria. Britain does her share by guaranteeing the Rhine. All she need do is lift her veto now against the guaranteeing of peace in the two other zones without (and therefore against) Germany and to consult with the guarantors. Britain has guaranteed France, and France, with the help of Russia, Czechoslovakia and persumably Poland, would guarantee the Corridor and the Baltic States, while France, on the other hand, with the help of Italy and the Little Entente—Czechoslovakia, Rumania and Yugoslavia—would guarantee Austria.

Such is the impression of the present British attitude that one gets from informed British quarters, who agree that this represents a sharp change in British policy—although they point out that it has been developing for many months—and that a decision to go on without Germany would be a "very grave" decision. But obviously they are counting on avoiding it by bringing Germany in.

Stranger things than this are already accomplished facts, they say, and they ask who believed a year ago that Russia would be in the League and France and Italy in an agreement. Why should it then be impossible to bring France and Germany into an agrement?

They count, too, on success of the Reichswehr and German heavy industry in getting the upper hand with Chancellor Hitler. They deem this group to be more moderate than the Wilhelmstrasse, whose views they believe are shared by Hermann Wilhelm Goering, the Prussian Premier, and Paul Joseph Goebbels, the Propaganda Minister. The moderation of that group is attributed to the knowledge that Germany will not be ready in a military way for two or three years. The backers of this British policy apparently greatly discount the Nazi party's influence now and think Herr Hitler is an oportunist.

The British attitude here outlined is so sharp a change from that of a year ago that even the French, who benefit most by it, seem hardly able to believe it. They seem to be taking it very cautiously, trying to test whether it is a real change or only a bluff. The British are not putting forth their position publicly in Europe nearly so boldly as it is summarized in this dispatch, but they seem to be preparing public opinion in this direction.

Some informed French quarters attribute the British policy to fear that trouble is brewing in Memel. They also carefully hint that London, being anxious to prevent war in the Pacific, is concerned about the rumored possibility of a Russo-Japanese deal, whereby Japan would agree to keep hands off Vladivostok and the maritime provinces if Russia withdrew her garrison of 200,000 and her bombing planes from this region.

It may be that this discreet British talk of going ahead without Germany is meant mainly to be pressure on Germany and Poland and that if it fails to allay them London will drop it. Such things have happened before. But until the event no one can be sure.

Yet there can be no doubt that since the Saar plebiscite went so strongly for Germany, the British, in the face of stiff German and Polish opposition to the Eastern pact, have been talking more and more of going ahead without Germany.

Neither the British nor the French have burned any bridges yet. It may well be they will not burn any. But it would be a mistake to leave out any longer the possibility of the Reich's being "encircled" with British approval, now that Germany can be isolated and the danger of two camps in Europe avoided.

California Seeks Revenue Sources

Legislature Faces Necessity Of Imposing New And Increased Taxes

Southern California has long been convinced that no good thing could come out of the North, and as all eyes turned during January toward the convening of the Legislature at Sacramento the sentiment lost none of its depth. Not that there is yet any personal animosity against individual statesmen—that will come later—but it is a fact not to be ignored that the session which is just getting under way must necessarily impose new and greatly increased taxes if the State is to be kept from actual insolvency, says Chapin Hall in the New York Times.

When the late James Rolph Jr. donned the toga four years ago his smile was none the less sunny because in the strong box of the Commonwealth was $16,000,000 to help ease over the hard years that even then impended. Well, the sixteen million is gone and about thirty million additional is needed to meet operating costs by the end of the fiscal biennium on June 30 next. For the new biennium an ultimate deficit of at least one hundred million threatens.

Governor Seeks Advice

Extravagance and waste account for some of this heritage of debt; relief and other contingencies brought about by the depression are responsible for much more. But the cold fact remains that, as Governor Merriam assumes the Gubernatoral office in his own right, California is scraping the bottom of the till.

So the question of paramount interest to every taxpayer is "What to do" The Governor does not know. He admitted as much the other day when, following a precedent set by the White House, he took to the air for a "fireside chat" and invited advice from all and sundry.

To increase taxes by more than one hundred million dollars ordinarily would mean political suicide for the party upon whom the necessity devolves and Republicans, escaping the almost universal annihilation last November by the grace of Upton Sinclair and EPIC, are in no mood to consider their advantageous position. The lawmakers face the situation with many misgivings.

The three propositions receiving the most concentrated attention involve an increase in the present sales tax, which at 2½ per cent produces a revenue of about fifty million dollars; another is a State income tax which should bring in from thirty to fifty million more, and an ad valorem tax which few understand. It is a property tax assessed by the State over and above that now collected by the counties.

The poor old gasoline tax is also being eyed furtively and lustfully. It is now 3 cents a gallon, but the return can be constitutionally used only for highway extension and upkeep.

The Governor succeeded in organizing both branches of the Legislature with friends of the administration in key positions. The EPIC crowd made little impression when the votes were counted.

The Townsend old-age revolving pension planners, unable to sustain their economic argument, but still retaining the allegiance of several hundred thousand voters who believe in fairies, profess themselves willing to carry their battle to the polls next year throughout the country.

Scientists Aim To Make Study Of Ionoshpere

Harvard Geophysicist Explains What This New Region Is Like

When the stratosphere is conquered, then what?

Though men have by no means reached the ceiling of this highly interesting region where planes may some day whizz at 400 to 600 miles an hour, yet today there is talk of a new 'sphere which in technical circles is known as the "Ionosphere." Dr. Harlan True Stetson, Harvard geophysicist, explained what this new region is like in a talk before the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences at New York recently on the subject "The Relation of the Sun and Moon to the Earth," says a staff correspondent of the New York Times.

In contrast with the serenity of a cloudless, mistless, black-gray, lower stratosphere, Dr. Stetson pictures the "ionosphere" now known as upper stratosphere, as containing "vast clouds of ions and electrons darting hither and thither, swept by tremendous winds stretching from the equator to the earth's magnetic poles."

Role of Pioneers

Marco Polo blazed his name through history when he strode from Europe over a little known portion of the lithosphere to wealthy China. Similarly Columbus braved the dangers of a mythical, serpent-infested hydrosphere; the Wright brothers sailed their airship into the troposphere or lower atmosphere, and Gray marked the stratosphere route for Settle, Stevens, Kepner, Anderson and the Piccards. Who will be the first to explore this new "jumping off place," the ionosphere? When? How?

Life infants struggling to reach objects beyond their grasp, physicists reach out for eerie worlds beyond their present ken. They want to know not only what makes the world go around, but all the details of what goes on five, 10, 50, 100 miles above the earth's surface.

By means of instruments, men extended their grasp to secrets of the tropsophere, or lower atmosphere, years before flight was invented. By means of instruments, they knew facts about the stratosphere long before the first flight into the upper air was made. A tiny balloon, pilotless, traveled from Padua 23 miles straight up to bring back instruments and data collected in a record-breaking journey.

Radio waves have been sent even higher to bump against layers of protons and electronts at heights varying from 50 miles to several thousand miles. The lowest is known as the Kennelly-Heaviside layer, discovered independently by both Kennelly and Heviside. Like a ball bouncing against the ceiling, radio waves strike this layer and are reflected back to earth carrying added information for physicists to theorize with.

In the troposphere it was found that heights of five to ten miles marked a region of violent change. The earth's atmosphere consists of many different gases which if allowed to remain still would separate like oil on water or cream on milk, with the heaviest gases nearest the earth. But the normal earth's notation churns them up, causes winds and storms.

Here was found the answer to why the sky is blue. This was discovered to be caused by tiny particles of air, dust and water vapor present which make up the atmosphere and allow mostly the blue waves to show. Because during a rain storm the heaviest dust particles are removed, the sky is always bluest immediately afterward.

For a long time men wondered why it was that in going up a mountain or climbing in a plane, the temperature decreased instead of increased, the higher one went. Theoretically, they were approaching the sun. Shouldn't the temperature rise instead of fall?

The winds of the troposphere whistle the answer. A man pumping a tire finds the air pumped in much warmer than it was when free. Gases under pressure not only take up less room—they increased in temperature. Release the pressure and temperature decreases.

The stratosphere is a buffer region, a layer of uniform temperature, cloudless and windless. Above this Dr. Stetson and others, notably Dr. C Stormer and Prof. A. E. Kennelly and Dr. O. Heaviside, hold there is a region as electronically turbulent as the lower stratosphere is tranquil.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Stone Slinger

Giovanni Perasso, 14 years old, happened to be in Genoa on December, 5, 1746 when the Austrian armies took possession of the city. An Austrian regiment moving heavy cannon through the streets pressed some Italian passersby in to service to help them move a heavy gun which became mired in the mud. One particularly brutal Austrian struck an Italian with the butt of his musket. Perasso could not stand it any longer and threw a rock at the Austrian, shouting "I wish somebody would start it." This was the signal for a popular rebellion, which drove the Austrians from Northern Italy in 5 days. A monument was erected to Perasso in Genoa.

In 1926 Mussolini invoked this historical incident to enroll all boys from 6 to 18 under the banner of the Balilla or Rock Thrower. At present 2,216,166 youths are enrolled in the semi-military organization through which Il Duce hopes to perpetuate the Fascist rule.

A Champion School Commuter

Young students of rural schools should never again complain about going to school when they hear of Eunce Foster of Guion, Texas, who must walk 5 miles and ride 37 miles every day to attend her classes. Eunice's home is situated off the highway, and she must walk 2½ miles each way to board the bus. Then she rides to and from the Winters High School, which is more than 2 miles from her home. By the time she gets her diploma she will have covered at least a thousand miles on foot, and many thousands of miles through the mud, rain and snow in the bus.

Mrs. Irene Vera Young

AUSTRALIAN DANCER IS STUDYING ODORI

Irene Vera Young, one of the leaders in the new dance movement in Australia, has just arrived to study odori, and is staying at the Imperial Hotel.

With the characteristic speed of the young and active nation to which she belongs, Mrs. Young has enrolled as a student in the classes of Madame Sumi Hanayagi, and is losing no time in being gradually initiated into the mysteries of the Japanese dance, wearing tabi and Kimono, and carrying the traditional fan.

Mrs. Young, however, is no amateur when it comes to the modern dance of the West. She studied in New York for seven years. At the beginning of her experience in America, Mary Wigman, and other German dancers, were attracting much attention, and she came under their influence. She studied for a considerable period with Hans Wiener, the Vienna dancer who proved so successful as a teacher of dancng in Shanghai and received inspiration from the Chinese actor, Mei Langan. Later he went to New York where he is one of the best teachers. He is also well known to Boston.

In returning to Australia Mrs. Young at once attempted to focus interest on the modern dance, as Australia has no national dance, and the modern movement had not yet started in this country.

She opened a school in Sydney, which has exerted wide influence and she gives six recitals a year when she appears with her pupils in modern group dances and her motion choir.

As the dance is not yet a commercial possibility in Australia, the membership of Mrs. Young's school is made up of girls who earn their own livelihood, and yet have time to give to the modern dance and the sphere of creativeness it represents.

In her absence three of her pupils are in charge of her school and will carry on its activities.

Filled with enthusiassim for the new form of the dance to be found in Japan, Mrs. Young has come to spend several months in concentrated study. She wishes to understand something of the spirit of Japan's genius in the dance and to spread this gospel in her own country.

This may be hard of accomplishment, since the secrets of the Japanese dance are not learned in a day, and the technique is a matter of slow practice.

If she succeeds in translating odori to her audience in Australia, she may return at some later time to study, or some of her pupils may be sent to acquire greater knowledge of the complicated art of odori.

In the mean time, Mrs. Young may give a recital here. She would thus be the first Australian exponent of the modern dance to appear in Tokyo.

JAPANESE-AMERICANS HEAR MISS LESTER

The Rev. and Mrs. Theodore D. Walser were hosts at a buffet supper to a unique group Monday night at their residence at Tsuna Machi, Mita, Shiba ward, Tokyo.

There were 20 young men and women, all American citizens of Japanese ancestry, who plan to meet regularly in the future with the view to learning Japanese culture so they can better promote friendly relations between the United States and Japan. They also hope to contribute to the Japanese something of the best of American culture.

Then there was present Miss Muriel Lester, founder of Kingsley Hall Settlement, London, and a friend of Mahatma Gandhi, who although British by nationality, belongs to the entire world because of her untiring efforts in the interests of universal peace.

Miss Lester, who is on a world tour and is visiting Japan for the first time in two years, gave an inspirational talk, declaring that there is a new sort of man evolving who is not afraid to be in the minority convinced that war is wrong and no one profits from it.

Miss Lester too brought a message from young groups in California, seeking cooperation from similar elements in Japan in bringing about goodwill among the nations. Having arrived only last week on the Asama Maru, it was the first group to whom Miss Lester had an opportunity to deliver the message that had been entrusted to her.

Those present were: Messrs. Ruizo Shiota, Ken Murayama, Dr. Hugo Okunogi, Goro Murata, Leslie Nakashima, Masayuki Harada, Hisao Yoshii, Henry J. Tsurutani, and the Misses Nori Shimomura, Shizue Kawai, Hana Kawai, Yaye Togasaki, Aiko Tashiro, Lily Otta, Yoshiye Yamamoto, Ruth Morishita, Chieko Kuroda, Mr. and Mrs. Nobundo Oda, Mr. William Merrell Vories, Rev. and Mrs. Walser, Miss Margaret Walser and Mr. T. Paris to Avoid Glutting World Wheat Market

Final Liquidation To Depend On Export Quotas Of 'Big Four'

The international agreement for liquidating France's wheat surplus of 88,000,000 bushels, is proceeding according to plan, the Wheat Advisory Committee at London announces, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

The French Government has informed the Committee that its permitted exports of 11,000,000 bushels of milable wheat will be released for export in four equal lots to avoid depressing prices. By April 1 the first three lots will have been exported. The last lot will not be released until the "Big Four" among wheat exporters—the United States, Canada, Argentina and Australia—have been able to fix their export quotas for 1934-35.

The "Big Four" and the other principal wheat growers recently agreed to cut their exports to enable France to get rid of is present surplus. When that surplus has gone, they reckon that France will once more become a buyer of their wheat—for France is normally an importer.

The French Government's plan is to get rid of 55,000,000 bushels internally. When this amount is gone, there will still be 22,000,000 bushels which the exporters have agreed France should be allowed to export. But all of it is to be denatured so that it may only be sold for animal feed.

To Tell Destination

The Wheat Committee is to be informed of the probable destination or these exports of denatured wheat their distribution and the measures taken to make sure that the exported wheat is used solely for animal consumption.

So far only France, Germany, and Switzerland have had considerable experience in denaturing wheat. The usual process is to spray the wheat with a weak solution of some harmless coloring agent, such as methylene blue, which is already well-known to farmers. Five per cent of this colored wheat is then thoroughly mixed with normal grain and given to livestock, which are said to thrive on it.

This denaturing of low or medium quality wheat to increase the amount of wheat feed to live-stock is one of the measures which wheat growers have been considering as a means of increasing the consumption of wheat. Too much wheat has been grown in the world in the past. Huge surpluses have accumulated. As a result, world prices have been depressed and wheat growers the world over have failed to get a fair price for their labors. Under the London Wheat Agreement of 1933, the "Big Four" agreed voluntarily to reduce their wheat acreage and to limit their exports to the world's importing needs. In return, the importing countries undertook not to grow more wheat.

But wheat growers realize that international limitation of production is not enough. World consumption, they feel, must be increased. And one way of increasing the demand for wheat is to feed more cattle on denatured wheat. The United States alone used 158,000,000 bushels of wheat as animal feed in 1932-33.

Decreasing Flour

Another method of increasing the world demand for wheat is to decrease the percentage of flour extracted from the grain. The less flour is extacted, the purer and more nourishing it is. In most countries the average flour yield is 72 per cent of the whole wheat. If millers and consumers could be satisfied with only a 60 per cent extraction, flour in Great Britain would cost 7.5 per cent more. In the United States it would probably cost 14 per cent more.

But if the whole of Europe without Soviet Russia chose to have this better quality though dearer loaf, it is estimated that the impoverished wheat growers of the world would be able to export 250,000,000 bushels more to Europe alone. The United States and Canada together would require another 100,000,000 bushels.

The present average annual consumption of wheat for human food in the world would be increased by nearly 17 per cent. And the world's surplus stocks, that great shadow over the wheat fields, would disappear.

Yet another method of increasing consumption which is said to be particularly adaptable to semiarid countries is the cutting of wheat when it is still green. It is then used as fodder and hay. This is the normal practice in Australia, where 10 to 15 per cent of the area sown to wheat is cut in this way. The wheat is cut and bound into sheaves with the ordinary reaper-binder, stooked and left to dry in the sun in the open field. Wheat cut in this way is said to have a particularly high feeding value if gathered when flowering.

Simon's Moscow Trip May Bring Up Oriental Issue

Immediate Objective To Discuss European Peace With Other Leaders

Nippon Dempo-United Press

LONDON, Feb. 23—The scope of the discussion envisaged in connection with the proposed journey of the British Foreign Secretary, Sir John Simon, accompanied by either Captain Anthony Eden, Lord Privy Seal, or Sir Robert Vansittart, Permanent Foreign Undersecretary, to Berlin, Moscow and Warsaw next month, it is possible to reveal, indicates that the tour is likely to be one of the most important diplomatic missions since the World War.

Although the immediate objective Sir John's trip is to place the peace of Europe on a more stable footing than is provided by the Versailles treaty, the discussions may have a significant bearing on the situation in the Far East.

The four main purposes of the mission are understood to be as follows:

1. To clarify the differences among Germany, Poland and the Soviet Union regarding the projected system of security for Eastern Europe and to ascertain the possibility of finding a platform acceptable to these three Powers.

Army Demands Sought

2. To elicit from Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler concrete demands regarding the effective armaments of Germany;

3. To do the utmost, meanwhile, to obtain a declaration of the corresponding French demands, for it is known that France insists on a margin of superiority over Germany in view of the latter's potential supremacy in man-power and industrial plants; and

4. To attempt, as the growing army and air force of the Soviet Union are cited as one of the major factors increasing the military requirements of Germany, to learn the extent to which the strength of the Red Army might be reduced to a level facilitating Germany's adherence to an arms convention.

If the British Government seeks an accommodation of the Red Army to Germany's security demands, the Moscow Government will undoubtedly explain that its army is the smallest of any of the great Powers compared with the mileage of its frontiers. It will probably point out, moreover, that it is impossible to discuss the matter merely from the European viewpoint, without considering the defensive needs of the Soviet Union in the face of the military preparations of Japan and Manchoukuo.

Great Britain is broaching these topics to the countries concerned through diplomatic channels, it is learned, as a preliminary to Sir John's mission.

Scores News Agency

Rengo

MOSCOW, Feb. 23—The Izvestia, official organ of the Central Executive, Committee, in an article published here today flays the Reuter News Agency, British-owned organ, for its stand on questions concerning the conclusion of an East European regional pact and a general European pact.

The Moscow journal states that Reuter and its informants are deeply mistaken if they believe that the question of an East European pact is one of the greatest handicaps to the conclusion of a general European agreements. If a general European agreement is to be an actual agreement, it says, then the East European regional part of mutual assistance should be a prerequisite, not a handicap.

It is further pointed out by the official organ that such a handicap would be a fact if it were true, as Reuter says, that the British views on this question are still somewhat indefinite and until now unformulated.

Assertion Surprising

Such an assertion cannot but cause surprise, reasons the Izvestia, for the communique of February 3, signed by the British authorities, states that a general agreement should be concluded for the purpose of providing an organization for the safety of Europe, particularly by the conclusion of pacts on a basis of free negotiations between all interested parties.

Thus, adds the Izvestia, on February 3 the British Government supported a pact in regard to mutual assistance in Eastern Europe. "How, then, is it possible to state that its point of view is unformulated?"

The Izvestia's attack closes by stating that if the views of the British Government become more indefinite, it will hardly help the conclusion of a general European agreement.

The Champion Optimist

"A Merry Christmas to One and All" is the wish of Marcus Finley of Hamburg, Arkansas, and I say "Same to you" from every one of the 80,000,000 Believe It or Not readers throughout the world.

Marcus Finley, now 53, has suffered from rheumatism since his youth and can now move only one part of his entire body—his elbow. His back is entirely stiff and he is unable to help himself in any way. Finley has been an invalid for 35 years and blind for the last 25 years. His legs have been amputated just below the hips and his arms are pressed across his chest with fingers tightly drawn. In this condition he has been bedfast for 30 years. Yet Mr. Finley maintains optimistic attitude towards life. And there are able-bodied, healthy, and wealthy people who complain of their lot!

M. H. Bodker, whose home is in Glendale, California, is possessed of a strange electrical power that enables him to forecast storms, earthquakes, volcanic disturbances, hurricanes or cyclones. He is unable to explain this curious ability except to say that an unknown electrical vibration that precedes weather changes has an effect on his body. Mr. Bodker likes to listen to the radio but, believe it or Not, it actually gives him a pain unless he grounds himself by dipping his copper wipe cane into a pail of water.

LINGUISTIC ABILITY OF JAPANESE STUDENTS

In an address given to the teachers of English at Doshisha University just before sailing for America, Prof. Frank Livingston Huntley commented on characteristics of Japanese students and discussed their linguistic ability. He said:

"The ability of the Japanese student in language depends upon his ability as a thinker. Here we have a strange contrast. In his own language the Japanese student thinks far more deeply than his American cousin. From my experience in teaching composition to American college students and to Japanese university students I can vouch for this fact. Often I have given the same topic for a paper in order to compare the two.

"For example, take the topic of the cinema. The American student will write of his favorite actress or sketch the plot of a recent film with his impression of it. Not so the Japanese. He will go deeply into the technical lore of the subject. His paper will be filled with 'shots,' 'Kliegs,' 'sequences.' He will compare the 'dimensions' of a German film with a Hollywood one. He will criticise the 'line' in photography, etc. In short he goes into the subject so deeply that he makes the American composition appear childish.

"Another favorite topic of mine is the description of a class-mate or a professor, the test being the ability of the class to recognize the subject of the portrait when the paper is read aloud in class. The American again is shallow: he will expatiate on the obvious physical characteristics of the person in question. Not so the Japanese: he delves into character like a Chekhov. It makes me nervous sometimes to think what my students must think of me.

"Here is an example: 'His face was swollen rather than round. His neglected long black hair cast the shadow of sadness over his face. His forehead, broad, and low covered with yellow black skin was channeled by three deep lines as if under them doubts and uneasiness about his life were rolling."

"An American student seldom writes about such things. Often the Japanese student will comment upon the mode of speech, as in, 'Not being talkative he speaks very quietly, with his head on one side. He is often silent, perhaps thinking of his study or his philosophy of life; but when he enters into a discussion on any serious subject he is often so eloquent that I cannot help wondering where his store of words comes from.'

"And yet with all this store of wisdom in the Japanese student he fails to grasp the simplest principles of composition. Why is it? He thinks deeply but in certain grooves; he has tremendous information on certain subjects; but he has not the facile mind that marks the student. Perhaps these are some of the reasons that make the Japanese student a particularly hard one to teach. First he is too dependent—dependent upon words rather upon ideas. . . . To offset this characteristic of the Japanese student there is an innate politeness that dictates that if the foreigner knows some Japanese he would be delighted to show that he is able to use it. . . .

"A third characteristic. . . is his bashfulness. Sometime I think that the national character is summed up in the adjective 'hatsukashii'. But just what this consists of its is hard to tell. It is related to the Japanese inborn sense of modesty, or more strongly humility—expressed in a thousand ways in his own language by various forms of 'herikudatta kotoba.' Personally it is a wonderful characteristic, and I admire it, but it does not make for language learning and language using. And this brings us to the fourth and last characteristic of the Japanese student, i.e. his reaction of ideas are mainly emotional. In literature he has a lively sense of the poignancy of human life, of its transiency, its profound melancholy, its joy, its love. . . . .

"Finally let us keep in mind the meaning of the word education—'to lead out'. To lead the student out of himself into a land of ideas and ideals, to inspire him with intellectual curiosity through the medium of language teaching—surely this can be done, and it is a challenge to each and every one of us."

Chinese Consul Replies To Address By Tamura

to come, China must depend on Manchuria to solve her problems of famine and over-population. Statistics prove that China has to import annually a large amount of foodstuffs.

"Manchuria, with its rich soil, is looked upon as the granary for millions of Chinese people. Manchuria also possesses the largest iron deposit and some of the best coal fields, and is destined to play a very important role in the industrial development of China. Japan has been exploiting the iron and coal mines in south Manchuria. It is estimated that the iron deposit will be exhausted in 10 years, and the coal deposit in 30 years; and the industrial development of China will be seriously menaced.

"China must also insist on her right to exist. China's requirements of these essentials of industry should be considered along with those of Japan. The needs of one nation give to it no moral right to exist. China's require-another nation. Needs do not justify robbery, either in private law or in international law.

"About 30 years ago, Japan held Korea as her 'life line' upon which her existence depended. Now Japan maintains that Manchuria forms a 'life line' equally essential to her existence. We have also seen, in Japanese newspapers, references to the South Sea islands which Japan holds under a league mandate as forming another 'life line.' Then, what would be the limit of this 'life line'? Is there not always a little more adjacent territory which would form a 'life line'? What is to become of civilization if every powerful nation takes Japan's example to extend its 'life line'?

Japan's Task Easier

"Japan is a highly industrialized country and can support many more people per square mile than an agricultural country like China. Moreover, Japanese immigration into Manchuria as a solution to the surplus population problem, is neither successful nor satisfactory. Since the so-called Manchoukuo came into being, two experiments in colonization have been made, groups of 500 settlers being sent in each case to Kirin province. Despite every assistance and liberal subsidies from their government, they have found that the paradise was far from coming up to their expectations, and large numbers of them have returned home cursing their lot.

"The reasons for their failure are as follows: 1. The climate in Manchuria is too rigorous for the Japanese people to endure. 2. The Japanese people lack the ability of toil and moil of pioneer settlers. 3. They know nothing of the cultivation of the indigenous Manchurian crops such as soya beans, kaoliang, ground nuts and others. 4. The Chinese inhabitants hate and oppose their rich land to be taken away by Japanese. 5. The Japanese immigrants require much greater subsidies than was anticipated. 6. The Japanese farmers have too high a standard of living in relation to their technical efficiency to permit them to compete economically with the Chinese farmers.

"The Japanese people have indeed increased 100 per cent in Manchuria since September 18, 1931. Mr. Sweatland, the Chicago Daily News correspondent in Manchuria, reported that this increase is composed of petty merchants and adventurers, café and beer hall proprietors, vegetable and fruit merchants, and other of nonproductives, and that they will constitute one of the grave future problems in Manchuria. Thus, Manchuria offers no solution to Japan's population problem.

"With regard to the principle of equal opportunity and the 'open door' policy, the conquest of Manchuria and Jehol by Japan means the loss to the American and European nations of a market of more than 40,000,000 inhabitants. The trade advantages which the Japanese enjoy in the Manchuria market are so numerous at the present time that other foreigners can not hope to compete with them save in a comparatively few lines.

Korea Case Cited

"We all know the extent to which the foreign trade of Korea had been monopolized by Japan since Japan incorporated that country in her empire. Since the occupation of Manchuria by Japan it would seem that the development in the same direction has already begun. American and European firms handling merchandise or rendering services, which are competitive with the Japanese people in Manchuria, have either abandoned the field or have suffered loss. The door may be open, but opportunity is by no means equal.

"Here I would like to quote a few lines from William Martin's writing which appeared in the October issue of Current History, 1933. He wrote as follows:

"'The Japanese know very well how to make life impossible for foreigners. The present dispute between Manchoukuo and the Soviet Union over the Chinese Eastern railway is significant from this point of view. If the Soviet Union is willing to sell is rights in the railway for a mess of pottage it is not merely because it needs the money nor it feels weak and keenly desires peace everywhere and above all in the Far East, it is primarily because the Russians know that the Japanese are able to ruin the railway, destroy its whole economic and political value and thus deprive them of all bargaining power. What is true of the Chinese Eastern railway applies to all western economic interests in Manchuria, and there are no illusions on this point.'

Oil Firms Face Ouster

"Recently there has been another dispute between the so-called Manchoukuo and the foreign oil companies over the oil monopoly given to Japan. The foreign oil companies, especially the Standard Oil Co., will soon find their long established business ousted completely by a Japanese monopoly. Japanese supremacy in Manchuria really means rapid elimination of foreign powers from the market.

'Ambassador Saito told us last October at the quartely luncheon of the chamber of commerce at the Royal Hawaiian hotel that remarkable progress has already been accomplished in Manchuria by way of establishing a regime of law and order. But from many foreign authorities and correspondents in Manchuria, we obtain reports to the contrary.

Even the so-called official Manchoukuo news service in a dispatch from Harbin dated August 22, 1934, gave us figures which section of the Chinese Eastern railway since the beginning of that year 19 trains have been wrecked, while the railway line has been tampered with on 41 occasions and there have been 92 attacks upon railway stations. During the same period 116 passengers and railwaymen were kidnapped, six were killed and 102 injured, and 31 bridges were destroyed. The total damage from bandit activities during the period from January to mid August is estimated at 1,000,000 yen.

"All these facts represent the movement of protest and resistance by a downtrodden population against illegal oppression. The people there never conceive themselves as hopeless and they keep up sporadic warfare until an opportunity arises for their freedom. They are Chinese by birth and faith and the whole world knows that they are now just as much Chinese as they ever were. They take every opportunity to let the world know that they are still Chinese. No conquest can convert them. They will remain loyal to China.

A Great Market

China with a large territory of different resources, and with the purchasing power of 450,000,000 people, possesses enormous possibility for advancement of international trade in the future, if she had an opportunity to develop peacefully without foreign aggression or invasion. There has been a rapid and continuous expansion of Chinese-American trade. Such expansion has brought the United States from second place in 1870 to first place in 1932 in the Chinese foreign trade. In the analysis of imports from the United States to China this expansion is more noticeable. In 1879 China took only about one per cent of her total imports from the United States, but in 1932 imports from the United States to China amounted to 25.43 per cent.

"This trade is but a small fraction of what it may be when China will be in full economic development, for which she has tried hard in the last several years. The greater the economic development of China, the greater the expansion in the trade between these two great continental areas bordering on opposite sides of the Pacific ocean.

"We hope to enlist the Americans' firm support of China's territorial and administrative integrity so that China can have a peaceful economic development.

"The world is interlocked. Grave danger or unrest anywhere is a universal concern. With the occupation of Manchuria and Jehol by Japan, the political status quo in the Pacific could no longer be maintained, and the peace of the world has since been threatened. Fidelity to the treaties, the well known principles of peace, and the methods for the pacific settlement of international dispute, is all we need.

"We seek a settlement of the whole situation in the Far East by way of international cooperation based upon justice and mutual benefit. There is really no loss of prestige either to China of Japan if such a system were applied. We will continue to cooperate to the best of our ability in any international movement, having for its object the strengthening of world peace, the prevention of war, and the general advance of civilization. Let all people of the world believe that enlightened patriotism is not to fight or invade other people, but to seek to build national honor and prosperity, on cooperation, harmony and peace."

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

"Light As Cork"

This familiar statement probably has its origin in the everyday contact with cork, since a handful of bottle corks or an ordinary block of commercial cork seems to weigh nothing at all. But, Believe It or Not, a 10-foot ball of pure cork weighs four tons.

A 10-foot sphere would have a volume of 523.6 cubic feet. Cork is generally given a specific gravity of .25 or about 25 per cent that of water. Water has a specific gravity of 1, and the accepted weight of water at 39 degrees F. is 62.5 pounds. Hence a cubic foot of cork weighs more than 8,000 pounds.

Cigars and Cigarettes

Twenty years ago we smoked two cigarettes for every cigar, says the N. Y. Times. Last year it was nearly thirty cigarettes for every cigar. The revolution has worked itself out on both sides of the equation. The consumption of cigarettes has increased eightfold, while cigars have been almost cut in two. Last year was a peak for cigarettes. They were consumed to the extent of almost 1,000 for every man, woman and child in the country.

The prosperity of the cigarette is in considerable measure due to women as part-time smokers. So far as we are aware, no Ph. D. thesis has made a study of how many puffs a woman will take before relegating her cigarette to the ash-tray or the mantlepiece. Casual observation would suggest that the average woman smoker consumes perhaps one-fifth of her cigarette as against something more than one-half for the average male practitioner. A vast amount of cigarette tobacco is consumed without being smoked. The late Thorstein Veblen might have called it conspicuous waste; especially on top of the piano.

Reciprocity With Canada

Detroit Free Press

The political situation in Canada today is far more favorable to reciprocity with the United States than it was in 1911. Then reciprocity was sponsored by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberals, with the Conservatives opposed to it. Today it is a Conservative Government that is proposing it. Since freer trade relations with the United States is part of the Canadian Liberal creed and since Premier Bennett has now given it the blessing of the Conservatives, there is no danger of any such fate overtaking the contemplated agreement as overtook and killed the Taft-Fielding pact.

The difficulties to be overcome in framing an acceptable trade agreement with Canada are economic rather than political.

AMAZING MENTALIST

World Famous Dutch Medical Psychologist

MR. SYLVAIN BOEKEBINDER

will give

A DEMONSTRATION

At HIBIYA PUBLIC HALL

Saturday, March 2nd, at 6. p.m.

ADMISSION: Yen 3, 2, 1.

One of the most astonishing men in the world is at present visiting Tokyo,—Mr. Sylvain Boekebinder,—the noted medical psychologist, who, at the age of 37, has developed extraordinary powers.

By means of mental telepathy he is able to describe events of the past, present and future, and describe a person's fortune, illness, troubles, character, business deals,—all the events that happen in a life time.

Mr. Boekebinder is well known not only as a psychologist and clairvoyant, but as an expert of medical jurisprudence he has acted as adviser to the police of Socrabia, Java.

At the Imperial Hotel last month, Mr. Boekebinder demonstrated successfully what medical psychology can do to a group of representatives of the press.

Again at the lecture and demonstration held at the Nippon Kogyo Club under the auspices of The Japan Times, Mr. Boekebinder delighted a large, enthusiastic audience which included members of the diplomatic corps and prominent persons from many walks of life in Tokyo.

The demand to hear Mr. Boekebinder has been so great that an association has been organized for the purpose of introducing him to a larger public. Therefore, a meeting will be held at Hibiya Public Hall, the proceeds to form a fund to be given Mr. Boekebinder for his services.

In the meantime, Mr. Boekebinder has been requested to postpone his departure and give Tokyo another chance to test his unique ability. This the mentalist has accepted with courtesy.

We hope that you will attend the meeting and see the results of medical psychology of which Mr. Boekebinder is such a brilliant exponent.

German Prince, In NY, Predicts Fall Of Hitler

Loewenstein Willing To Take Helm, He Asserts; Forecasts Coup By Army

Hubertus Frederich, Prince zu Loewenstein-Wertheim-Freudenberg, Count of Loewenstein-Scharffeneck, arrived recently on the United States liner President Harding for a lecture tour in which he will rally opposition to the Nazi regime in Germany, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

Prince Loewenstein explained that he was constantly working for the unification of all Germans who are not Communists and who do not like Adolf Hitler. The prince conforms to both of his own requirements. He was a leader of the Catholic Centrist party when Germany had more than one political party, and he recently complete a diligent, though ineffective, campaign for the status quo in the Saar plebiscite.

Prince Loewenstein offered his opinion that the Nazi regime was doomed to fail in a few years, and admitted that he would be "willing to assume the leadership of Germany after Hitler's fall." Explaining this statement, he said:

"I am not ambitious, but I am willing to assume responsibility. Am I likely to be chosen? Well, I am only twenty-eight, but later on, perhaps yes. We are not ready, and could do nothing for at least a year or two."

Self-Exiled Since 1933

Prince Loewenstein is tall and slim, and speaks with energy and confidence. As a matter of personal safety he has been self-exiled from Germany since May, 1933. His ultimate purpose, he said yesterday, was to restore a democratic system of government to Germany. Whether this was done under a republic or a limited monarchy mattered little now, he added, for the present task was to build up an opposition strong enough to oust Hitler.

"The United States, which I am now visiting for the first time, has proved that a nation can be democratic and yet be strong," he said. "A dictatorship is not necessary.

"The fall of Hitler will undoubtedly be brought about by economic crises. But probably he will last for another year or two. We hope he will, because we are not ready yet. After his fall the German army probably will form a provisional government. The army is opposed to Hitler and also opposed to war. The army men know that in case of war they would be the first to be killed. Those who drive for war are Goebbels, Goering, Hitler and others who would not be called upon to take any personal risk.

"The popular foundation of Hitlerism already is a thing of the past. The so-called purge of June 30, last year, was the turning point. The wholesale killings lost Hitler his popularity with the people. His rule is now based solely on his executive power."

Discusses Saar Drive

Prince Loewenstein turned to a discussion of the Saar vote, explaining that he had opposed the immediate return of the district to German state while the Nazis were still in control of the major part of the fatherland.

"We hoped that Germany would return to the Saar, not the Saar to Germany," he said. "I did not wonder at the vote. The polls were patroled by Storm Troopers. The Deutsche Front had issued special cards to those who wished to vote for Germany, and every voter was asked by the Nazis to show the card at the polling place. If he did not have one it was known that he was in favor of the status quo.

"Although the voting was fair, the moral pressure brought to bear upon the people as so strong that they fell under its influence. Another thing: the plebiscite commission failed to make sufficiently clear to the people the fact that they could have voted again on the subject in from three to five years."

Would Restore Jews' Rights

Summing up the aims of his visit to the United States, Prince Loewenstein said he hoped to help preserve the "real spirit of German culture, which now has no home in Germany." German culture owed much to Jewish genius, he added, and if his group came into power the rights of Jews in Germany would be restored.

The prince volunteered the information that he was probably the last man to hold a public anti-Hitler meeting in Berlin after the rise of the Nazis.

"The place was patrolled by police and Storm Troopers," he said, "but they did not stop me. I think they were so astounded to hear any one saying the things I said about Hitler that they did not know what to do."

Fled Into Austria

After that episode, he said, he fled the country, crossing into Austria with an ordinary passport before his arrest was ordered. Since then he and his wife have lived at their country home in the Tyrol, near Innsbruck. Life has not been uneventful, though.

"Our castle in the Tyrol was besieged by Austrian Nazis," Prince Loewenstein said. "They threw rocks at the windows and tried to enter. Later my wife was attacked while sitting in her car in Innsbruck by a crowd of fifty Nazis. They tore from the car the Republican flag we had placed on it and tried to drag my wife out of the seat. She fired a pistol over their heads and they dispersed."

Britain Studies Strength Of Her Pacific Defences

Sir Philip Sassoon's Trip To Far East Last Year Is Considered Significant

Rengo

LONDON.—Seventeen men-of-war, 4,000 infantry soldiers, and numerous air squadrons recently participated in the maneuvers at the Singapore naval base. No official explanation was given in London of these evolutions: they were ordinary training exercises, it is said.

Last week Sir Maurice Hankey, Secretary to the Committee of Imperial Defence, returned to London after a four months tour of the British Empire. At the time he was in Australia, Premier Ramsay MacDonald declared before the House of Commons that Sir Maurice has not been entrusted with any official mission whatsoever. However, recently in Canberra, a report drawn up by him was published, dealing in detail with military and strategic questions concerning the Australian Commonwealth.

Furthermore, at the end of last summer, Sir Philip Sassoon visited the British bases in the Far East, which, it was assured, was simply an inspection tour. Yet, on his return here, it was given to understand that Great Britain contemplated the establishment in the north of Borneo and in numerous British possessions in the Far East several air bases, for want of naval ones prohibited by the Washington Treaty. And, moreover, it was following his voyage, that were decided upon the big maneuvers at Singapore which, in their amplitude and mysteriousness, surpassed all that has been hitherto seen in that region.

Pacific Problem

Now that the London naval conversations have ended in failure, the Pacific problem comes to the fore in a still more acute form. Whether the American thesis proves stronger and the denunciation of the Washington Treaty entails the obsolescence of its strategic clauses or whether these clauses are maintained, the equilibrium is none-the-less upset.

In the first case, the restrictions imposed on fortifications of naval bases on the Pacific disappear. In the second, Japan benefits by a status quo which corresponded to an equilibrium of forces based on Japanese naval inferiority and which is to her advantage as soon as this inferiority is over.

Finally, the League of Nations will have to decide to what extent fortifications by Japan of her mandatory islands in the Pacific is legitimate. Whatever may be the decision in regard to Japanese obligations to Geneva, from the practical strategic viewpoint, this reinforcement of Japanese might certainly cannot leave indifferent either the British or the Americans.

Up to date, Great Britain has only acted within the strict limits of her contractual possibilities. The testing of the resisting capacity of Singapore, that rampart of the Pacific route, the developing or creating of air bases in the Far East,—such precautionary measures contravene none of the treaties signed by London.

Suggestion To Australia

After all, there could have been seen in all those measures, simply ordinary precautions taken by the General-Staffs, but for the rather conclusive elucidation provided by the report of Sir Maurice Hankey to the Australian Cabinet. The report recommends institution of an obligatory military training for all young people of the Commonwealth. It gives minute advice concerning fortification of certain strategic points, it suggests a complete reorganization of transport in case of general mobilization, and urges the Government to make uniform the type of railway tracks whose width at present is different in various states of Australia.

Whatever may be the fate of these suggestions, they show that the terminus of the Pacific route is as much cared for as the stages of this way: it is the last link of a chain which begins from India and passes through Singapore, the Straits and East Indies.

All this preparatory work preceded the denunciation of the Washington Treaty, although this step was naturally foreseen. The progress of this work, its acceleration and its eventual extension will, of course, depend on the evolution of naval negotiations.

Great Britain applies the same procedure for protecting her position in the Far East as she does for warding off European menaces. She ensures her security, then she negotiates in order to avoid being menaced, her diplomats completing the work of technicians without compromising it.

Motion To Allow Amateurs To Earn Money Making Films Is Opposed

Rengo

LONDON, Feb. 15—The English Lawn Tennis Association's endorsement of the Czecho-Slovak motion that amateur players be allowed to earn money by making lawn tennis films will not receive any support from the United States Lawn Tennis Association if the views of the President, Mr. Walter Merrill Hall, are any criterion.

"It would be a violation of the amateur rule to allow compensation to players for making lawn tennis action films," he said. "Personally, I am opposed to it."

Mr. Hall added that in his opinion the proposal, if ever brought before the International Federation, would not receive the necessary two-thirds majority to make it law.

The matter cannot be brought before the International Federation before May. A special general meeting would have to be authorised at the ordinary Federation meeting in March and then six weeks notice would be necessary.

City Of Algiers Is Launched By The French Line

8,820-Ton Vessel To Start Service Next Summer; Normandie Nearing Completion

The Ville d'Alger (City of Algiers), the French Line's new liner for its Marseilles-Algiers Mediterranean service, was successfully launched at 4 p.m. on February 4 at the Penhoet Shipyards in St. Nazaire, according to word received here.

The new unit of the French Line's great fleet is of 8,820 tons displacement, 30,000 horsepower, 478 feet long and has a service speed of 20 knots. She will have a passenger capacity of 1,014, with a staff of 15 officers and a crew of 112.

The ventilating system of the new liner has been the subject of much careful study, and, as a result, she will be an ideal vessel for Mediterranean service, even in the midsummer heat. Each room will boast powerful Punkah-Louvre ventilators of the most modern design, such as are found on the latest Atlantic luxury liners. In deciding this important feature, as well as the question of fire-prevention and other security measures, the study and research made for the new Normandie, world's largest ship, now building at St. Nazaire, have been drawn on, to the great benefit of her smaller sister.

Decorated In Modern Style

Decorated in the modern style, she is, in effect, a small edition of the Ile De France, present flagship of the French Line fleet and will enter the Mediterranean service next summer, cutting down the present running time by more than four hours.

The building of the Ville d'Alger is in furtherance of the company's policy of keeping swift, modern vessels in its extensive Mediterranean service. Ever since 1855—nine years before the French Line took its present name of Compagnie Generale Transatlantique—the company has had a fleet in the Mediterranean and today maintains a schedule of frequent sailings from Marseilles to Casablanca, Mazagan, Safi and Mogador in Morocco, Algiers, Oran, Bone and Philippeville in Algeria, and Tunis, Bizerte, Sfax and Sousse in Tunisia, as well as a network of luxury motor tours across the full breadth of French North Africa.

If the din and clatter of modern life in average cities and towns get on your nerves—go to sea!

That is the implied admonition of the scientific builders who designed the French Line's new superliner Normandie, world's largest ship, now nearing completion at the Saint Nazaire shipyards in France, preparatory to the vessel's transfer to Havre from which port she will start her maiden voyage to New York on May 29th.

Vibration Removed

No matter what the movement of the ship may be—how slow or fast she will be going, or what mood the playful ocean is in—there will not be any of the old-time creaking which has tried the tempers of ocean travelers since man first went to sea, according to the company's officials. The vibration caused by powerful engines moving the ship through the sea, and the harmless but bothersome sounds of stanchion, plus the audible flexibility of the whole structure as she speeds along, will be so minimized in the Normandie's case as to be unnoticeable. The use of flannels effected this.

A generous layer of fireproof flannel has been placed between all up-rights and in the walls of the new mammoth ship, careful experiments having been made long before installation to determine the exact wearing qualities of the material, and its ability to deaden noises that arise from the ordinary and natural rubbing of one part upon another, throughout the ship, when in motion. The beneficial result is twofold reduced vibration, and less noise.

From the moment the keel was laid or the building of the new supership, the Normandie's flannels have been expertly fitted to her. They are put on her to stay, conserving the ship as well as the nerves of passengers who love the peace and quiet of the ocean but have never been able to find it when engines are at work. Every joint in the ship, its inside walls, floors and interior uprights, today have on their flannels. The result obtained is very similar to that achieved in the modern public dining room where the ceiling absorbs even the clatter of dishes, or at least gives that impression.

So, thanks to the good old flannels of the world's largest ship, the traveler of the future who does not yearn for just plain noise or even the muffled creaking of metal on wood, or wood on wood, and who wants the peace and quiet of Utopia, may find it hereafter by putting to sea—on the Normandie.

Giant Electric Range

One more step toward completion of the new French Line flagship Normandie, world's largest ship, was achieved with the installation and trial of the giant electric range in the kitchen which serves both first and tourist class passengers.

Figures concerning this gigantic item of kitchen equipment, modern to a superlative degree, are interesting to those who find statistics intriguing.

For instance: the weight of the range is 20 tons, 8 tons of which represent sheet iron, and 5 tons are insulating bricks. Within the range are 1420 meters (almost one mile) of electric wire, on which are strung 180,000 insulating porcelain beads, and which serve 56 hot plates, each of which has a switch for three different heats. Each hot plate is 10 incres in diameter, and reaches a maximum heat of 800 degree Centigrade. The power is 660 kilowat.

Thirty-two roasting ovens, each with a switch for two different heats, are capable of roasting at one time 768 chickens, and boast a maximum heat of 450 degrees Centigrade.

The range is 51 feet 3 inches long by 6 feet 100 incres wide, and is the product of the firm of Lidon, of Paris.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Doll's Hair That Grew

When Mrs. Edward Schima gave her 5-year-old daughter, Evelyn a doll many years ago it had the ordinary short hair that is common for dolls, but the hair was human. After a few years she found the hair had grown slightly and bobbed it. Thereafter the doll was cast aside and put in the attic where it remained for 12 years. Recently when it was removed the hair was found to have grown 4 inches in that time.

Stenography With One Hand

Utilizing a special fingering system, Virginia Martin of Salt Lake City, who was born without a right arm, has become an expert stenographer. She can take dictation at the rate of 160 words a minute and transcribe her notes on the typewriter at 50 words a minute.

Of all the 453 entrants in the International Commercial Schools Typewriting Contest at the World's Fair in Chicago, 1934, Miss Martinwas the only one who had a perfect paper.

Written by internationally famous novelist Vina Delmar, it was followed by millions of readers when printed serially in Liberty Mazazine. With Joan Crawford as the star and Clarence Brown directing, an incomparable trio had charge of its production.

"Sadie McKee" is a vivid dramatization of the average American girl. She is the girl who lives next door, or just around the corner. She is seen everywhere—in street cars, subways, buses, theaters, shops.

In the story she is the daughter of a cook in a small town. She falls in love with the carefree young man who works for her mother's employer. Like many a modern girl, she elopes and tries her luck in a great city, in this case New York.

"Doctor Monica" With Kay Francis and Warren William

A Warner Brother picture which is promised soon is "Dr. Monica," featuring Kay Francis, supported by Jean Muir and Warren William.

"Doctor Monica" is a story in which both wife and the "other woman" try to sacrifice themselves to insure the happiness of the other.

Kay Francis has the title role, but although she portrays the part of a physician, there are no hospital scenes or medical sequences. The "other woman" is Jean Muir, and the husband, beloved by both, is played by Warren William.

The plot is taken from a famous Polish play, and comes to a strange and dramatic climax when the wife arranges to give up her husband when she finds he is the father of the other woman's child, but is thwarted by the girl, who ends her life in one of the most exciting scenes ever shown on the screen.

SALVATION ARMY CHANGES

Commissioner Gunpei Yamamuro, territorial commander of the Salvation Army, today became Territorial Counsellor while two younger officers of the organization, Lieut. Cols. V. E. Rolfe and Yasowo Segawa, became joint territorial commanders. They hold the position which Commissioner Yamamuro formerly held alone.

The change was made along lines proposed at the recent convention of the High Council of the Army in London which Commissioner Yamamuro attended. The change was made to increase the effectiveness of the Salvation Army work in Japan. Commissioner Yamamuro, relieved of detail work, will not have time to devote himself to the wriing of an exposition of the old testament to correspond with his treaties on the books of the new testament.

As Territorial Counsellor, he will continue to guard and further the interests of The Army, of which organization he has been an officer for forty years, rising to the highest rank possible, and he will continue to give his lectures to cadets in Training for officership, conduct meetings, and counsel the new territorial commanders from his long and wide experience of Army work and administration.

The Joint-Territorial Commanders, although considerably younger than Commissioner Yamamuro, are men of ability and extensive experience in Army affairs. Lieut.-Colonel Rolfe has served in Japan for 10 years, and for the past four years has ably aided Commissioner Yamamuro as Chief Secretary. Lieut.-Colonel Segawa has held the position of Field Secretary for a number of years, will be succeeded by another capable officer, Lieut.-Colonel Uyemura.

Under this new arrangement, which is sanctioned by General Evangeline Booth, the Army's Social and Evangelistic work in this country, with its special appeal to the man in the street, will be prosecuted with renewed enthusiasm and energy by all its officers and soldiers.

Small Tax Urged On U.S. Pay For Job Insurance

Graham, Of North Carolina University, Puts Proposal To Senate Committee

A 4 per cent Federal tax on pay rolls for unemployment insurance, instead of the 3 per cent levy proposed in President Roosevelt's social security program, was recommended recently by Frank D. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina. He urged the higher figure as a further inducement for the states to enact unemployment insurance legislation, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Graham, who was testifying on the security program before the Senate Finance Committee, served as chairman of the special group which advised the Administration's Cabinet committee on the security program.

Suggests Government Give 1 per cent

The university president said if 4 per cent was too much for employers to stand, then 1 per cent should be contributed by the Federal government. This 1 per cent, taken from general taxation, was described by Mr. Graham as a move toward distribution of wealth. Mr. Graham said he felt 4 per cent necessary to give adequate benefits to workers. He opposed employee contributions on the theory that the worker is "the victim, not the cause, of unemployment."

Turning to old age pensions, Mr. Graham said he favored a $40 minimum, if it could be soundly financed.

Simultaneously, the House Ways and Means Committee heard C. A. Hathaway, editor of "The Daily Worker," tell why the Communist party in America is opposed to the administration bill "in toto":

"It is not designed," he said, "to provide security for the masses, but rather for the rich who dominate the country. It is designed first to quiet the masses by offering them a sham measure that will in reality give them nothing, and secondly, the sponsors see in this a possible method of lowering the cost of caring for the unemployed and lowering the living costs of the American people to increase the benefits of the rich."

Administration Plans Cuts

While critics of President Roosevelt's social security program sought higher benefits, Administration officials were reported today to be planning to cut proposed Federal expenditures by several hundred million dollars a year.

The recommendations were not in final shape, but would call, it was said, for elimination of Federal donations for "unearned annuities."

Under the Administration plan now before Congress, a man of forty-five could begin providing against his old age by paying into the old-age pension fund. At sixty-five he would start getting the money back, plus payments by the Federal government equal to the additional sum he would have contributed had he started paying when he was twenty-one years old. These payments from the government are called "unearned annuities." Actuarial calculations showed, officials said, that they would cost huge sums, and additional objection was raised by some legislators that the annuities would be unfair competition with insurance companies.

Another change considered in Administration circles, it was said, was a transfer of the unemployment insurance fund from a social insurance board to the Treasury. Witnesses nad told Congressional committees that if the board administered the money it might seem like charity.

British Discover Public Works No Cure For Idleness

Outlay Of £1,000,000,000 Fails To Bring Forth Benefits Sought, League Is Told

"The experiment of large-scale public work as a method of dealing with unemployment has been tried and has failed, and it is not intended to repeat it."

Such is the considered view of the British Government as officially set forth in a memorandum sent to the League of Nations in reply to the latter's public works according to the London correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

The League believes that a continuous international study of the public works of the world—particularly hose big programs of work financed from national resources—would be of considerable value to all governments. It would enable them to compare experience and results, and especially the effect of such works on the resumption of economic activity and unemployment.

In its reply to the League's inquiries, the British Government declares that the test of any public works is "their social or economic value," and, therefore, "the amount of employment provided cannot be the paramount consideration."

British experience over some years, the memorandum continues, is that "the stimulation of special works selected primarily in respect of their employment-providing capacity has an effect on the unemployment position which is small relative to the heavy expenditure incurred, and the works, when completed, leave heavy burdens on national and local finances which impede the recovery of normal activity."

A recent study of several schemes showed that an expenditure of £1,000,000 in Great Britain provided employment for about one year for 4000 men. This figure includes not only the men actually engaged in the undertaking, but also all those concerned with the provision of materials, transport and subsidiary industries.

Since 1919, the Government points out, the total capital expenditure on subsidized housing in the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland is well over £700,000,000. During these 14 years about £130,000,000 has been spent on road schemes, and £120,000,000 on telephone development. Substantial sums on these services are still being spent and a national effort at considerable expense is now being made to make a quick finish of slums. These outlays total well in excess of £1,000,000,000.

Billions Spent

Since 1919, some 17,640 schemes, costing £190,000,000, were assisted by grants from the Unemployment Grants Committee.

These items, the Government points out, are merely the major ones. Smaller sums have been spent by statutory companies with state aid and by public authorities on land settlement, land drainage, colonial development, fishery, harbors and rural water supply. Large sums have also been spent by local authorities and other bodies with or without state assistance.

Public works, the Government declares, are part of the normal activities of the state. They will therefore continue in Great Britain, "subject to the test of their value to the community."

The British memorandum to the League concludes with the reiteration of Whitehall's well-known view that "the expansion of normal activity will most surely and rapidly be brought about by the creation of confidence by steady policy—in particular, financial confidence by a balanced budget, the lowering of rates of interest with resultant cheap and plentiful capital, and, in so far as Government action is possible, by the creation of facilities for and the removal of hindrances to trade."

MARDI GRAS BY AMERICAN ASSOCIATION

The entire American community is agog over the plans for the American Association's plans for a Mardi Gras Carnival on next Tuesday beginning at 7:30 p.m. in the gymnasium of the American School. The announcement calls for each person to come in costume and masked. More than a hundred have indicated their attendance at this final community carnival booked for Shrove Tuesday, the last day before the season of Lent begins, according to Mr. Eric Sitzenstatter, Chairman of reservations.

To carry out the spirit of carnival, Mrs. Paul Steintorf, Chairman of Decorations, assisted by Mrs. J. W. Conway, have engaged professional decorators and promise one of the most colorful scenes yet attempted by the association for any of its many past entertainments. The entire gymnasium of the School is to be transformed into a carnival street scene, hung with flags of all nations, and lanterns, with gayly decorated food booths on one side, and with sidewalk tables and chairs lining the four walls. With all the attendants and guests in gay costumes and with Mr. Edwin L. Neville, one of Tokyo's most humorous masters of ceremonies in charge from the time the doors open until the evening is ended, the affair bids fair to be gay and glamorous from start to finish.

The music for dancing will be the order for the entire evening, with guests taking such time out for supper as they desire. A variety of foods ranging from corn beef and cabbage, hot dogs, salads, apple tarts, doughnuts, to coffee and punch will be offered to all the guests from six booths, in charge of Mrs. James Course and her committee of ladies. Mrs. George Hayes from a push cart will dispense hot dogs. Periodically throughout the evening Mr. Neville will introduce specialty numbers such as a group of "Hill Billies" in old favorites with parts taken by Mr. Robrt F. Moss. Mr. Douglas MacGregor, Mr. R. M. Corbin and Mr. A. M. Lury: a take-off on the famous Boswell Sister act, entitled the "Sobwell Sisters" featuring popular young Tokyo matrons, Mrs. William George Hillen, Mrs. A. M. Lury and Mrs. George H. Marshall; and extracts from the famed musical show, "Rose Marie," featuring Mrs. Alexander George, who before her marriage to Lieutenant George played the part of "Rose Marie" on the New York stage, and Mr. William George Hillen. The featured numbers on the program will be performed from the floor in the center of the building under a special spot-light arrangement worked out by Mr. William Kirk Fowler, Chairman of the Lighting Committee. This will produce the Carnival atmosphere that the Commitee in charge headed by Mrs. Harold C. Amos, has been working for.

Mr. Paul Steintorf will lead mass singing of old favorites and popular songs from a raised platform among the tables for guests. From this same platform Mr. Neville will reign as Master of Ceremonies, and from which he will ballyhoo greetings in night club fashion to the guests as they find their tables. An added feature for the carnival will be a Gypsy fortunetelling tent conducted by Mrs. Douglas MacGregor. Throughout the early part of the carnival all guests will be asked to cast ballots for the best costumed man and woman and the climax of the evening will come when the Master of Ceremonies crowns the King and Queen of Carnival according to the number of votes cast for costumes. The chances for several other unexpected acts are good according to Mr. Paul Rusch of the Program Committee. One depends upon the arrival in time of the President Hoover and another is being worked out with a celebrated and world famous magician now in Tokyo.

The Mardi Gras Carnival promises to be one of the gayest and most unusual entertainments put on by the American Association of Tokyo. The affair is open to all members and their friends and such other members of the American community who may not as yet belong to the association. The charge for the entire evening, including supper is ¥2 per person. The committee wants to accommodate all who may wish to come but must know in advance to ensure an adequate preparation of food. Persons who have not as yet sent in reservation cards are asked to communicate at once by telephone to Mr. Sitzenstatter at Ginza 1124, 2425 or 2426, or with any member of the committee in charge of arrangements, consisting of Mrs. Harold C. Amos, Chairman, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Steintorf, Mr. Edwin L. Neville, Mr. J. M. Conway, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Sitzenstatter, Mr. D. H. Blake, Mr. Paul Rusch, Mrs. James Course, Mrs. Alexander George and Mr. William Kirk Fowler.

Growing Interest In East Told At Luncheon

of 2. A grandmother of one of our students was rather jealous because the children liked their teachers rather more than their granny, and she began making up libellous letters and sending them to the educational authorities of the district telling lies about the way things went on in the school. Eventually the head, Miss Quailt had to bring her to book, and for a long time the old woman vowed she had written nothing. But circumstantial evidence was too great, and finally she owned up, collapsed on the shoulder of Miss Quail, wept down her neck, and said, "Oh Miss Quail, I am as good a woman as God ever made, but I can't live up to it". Various theologians to whom I have taken pleasure in relating this story, have said that it might be the beginning of a new religion.

"The peoples of the world, I am absolutely convinced, only want to be let alone, to live in peace, and to look after their gardens and children and animals and pictures and their ordinary life. They are good people, but they cannot live up to it because they are not allowed, because of propaganda, and all the devices continually at work to prevent them. We all know that. But I feel I might be of some use in giving one or two stories of things I have seen in the last eighteen months while I have been going round the world.

A Creative Army

"I met people in Switzerland who, from the end of the War, made up their minds that it was not good enough for them to be put into the Swiss army (which never does any fighting because it doesn't possess anything that anyone wants, and its mountains are irremovable) and wanted to do better service for their country and the world. So they raised a voluntary subscription to start an army in which anybody could go, no matter what race, to do creative and constructive work on the basis that no one wanted to harm anyone else. This little army has been operating every year in the summer since the end of the war.

"The first thing they did was to go into one of the towns in the areas devastated by the war, to help the people build up their homes. While I was in India last spring I was taken to the area of the earthquake of Bihar, a region as large as Scotland, where great chasms in the ground were so broad that four elephants could walk abreast in them, where sand had been thrown up from deep down in the earth and had covered an area of about 2 million acres of arable land sometimes to the height of two feet. I saw Indian peasants with their little plough—men whose only hope of living lies in their little fields, trying to dig the plough under the sand to reach the earth and not succeeding in doing so. That little army from Switzerland or two of them went out to start a is now operating in Bihar, Just one unit there, to help the people to clear up that vast area.

"That is the sort of thing that people love to do. That was the thought at the back of the minds of those people who decided to start a ballot to discover the feelings of the ordinary people of England and France about the present international situation. All these things strengthens our conviction that among the peoples of the world there is a passionate desire to live in peace and amity and concord."

The text of Miss Owen's speech follows:

"I feel it a great honor to be your guests today. I had already heard in Honolulu of the splendid work being done by the Pan Pacific movement towards international understanding.

"It is important that we should realise that all countries want peace, good understanding and friendship. Not only the common people but the politicians want peace, though it seems often as if politics and peace are divorced. We hear about the way in which politicians of different countries are trying to bring about disarmament and realise how hopelessly they fail, and because they have failed so far it is up to the ordinary people to lead the politicians in the way of peace. I would like to tell you just how the ordinary people are working for this in Europe.

Disarmament Wanted

"When the Disarmament Conference was meeting in Geneva in 1932 and Mr. Henderson was the president, many young people in Europe were watching it with anxious eyes. They went throughout different countries—Holland, Belgium, France, Switzerland—speaking on disarmament in the towns and villages, and then went to Geneva to record what they had found. They had obtained the signatures of about 50,000 people all supporting disarmament. Some wanted the Conference to work for a 50 per cent reduction of armaments by 1935, for the abolition of conscription in countries where it still exists. for the abolition of bombing and air warfare, etc.

"A little while ago a certain professor at Liverpool University decided it was rather futile to teach economics when there were more important things to do, and he gave up his post and started a peace ballot to find out what the people thought about total and unconditional and immediate disarmament for Great Britain.

Amazing Results

"When the papers came in the result was amazing—57 per cent of those who had voted were in favor of total and immediate disarmament. A similar vote in an agricultural district in France (and an agricultural region is always the most conservative) resulted in a 67 per cent in favor of disarmament for France.

"I think this will give you some idea of the way in which people are working and thinking about peace in Europe."

"I do not know why I have been honored with the privilege of addressing you at this luncheon, and I am afraid my discourse will not be as interesting as Miss Lester's certainly was.

"It may be of interest to some of you to learn from a scientific man something about the latest developments as far as Japan is concerned. As science is non-political, I believe I may speak frankly. When I decided to stop in Japan I did so for one purpose. In Europe as well as America you hear that Japan is dumping and selling her goods at unbelievable prices. Just as I am speaking frankly now, so I will tell frankly when I go back that I do not feel such ideas justified if they are not based on facts, and as far as this country goes I have proved to my satisfaction that they are not.

Governed by 3 Factors

"The Japanese rubber industry has in the last ten years made amazing development, and since last year has ranked third in the list of rubber consumers of the world. Ten years ago it was ninth. The consumption is about 73,000 tons per annum. In visiting quite a number of factories I have found that three main factors govern the success of this industry here—absolutely top modern machinery and equipment, very clever and flexible organization, and naturally, comparatively cheap labor.

"But the most important point for the future aspects of this industry is that the production is now of perfect quality, and I have seen many rubber goods manufactured here which in quality will not yield to any American or European production. I also found that the scientific line is followed up very carefully here, and if you visit some of the scientific institutions in Japan you will be amazed at their nodern apparatus and their way of attacking the various problems which present themselves. They are developing a number of their own ideas which should help the rubber industry as well as other industries to be more and more prominent.

Urges Visit To Japan

"I hope that other colleagues of mine from time to time will visit Japan and find that my opinion is correct, because as we are scientists and not politicians I believe in bringing this knowledge to western countries, to assist in the mutual improvement of the world's trade, for I believe this to be absolutely necessary if there is to be peace finally and for good in the world.

Mexico Repudiates British Oil Grant

Cancels All The Concessions Of National Land Made To Eagle Company In 1906

Consternation was caused in petroleum circles on Feb. 4 with the publication of an official decree the same day canceling all concessions affecting national lands granted to the British-owned Eagle Oil Company in 1906 on the ground that they are unconstitutional and against the best interests of the republic.

The company is the largest oil concern operating in Mexico. Its local officials do not believe the government will go to the limit announced by its decree, which would affect immense interests in six Mexican States, according to New York Times.

The statement issued recently by the company says in part:

"The concession—really a contract with mutual obligations—just declared cancelled by the Mexican Government was granted to the Eagle company in 1906 by an act of the federal Congress as an inducement to foster the development of oil in Mexico, then an undeveloped industry and which since has been one of the principal sources of revenue for the Mexican Government.

Concession Held Legal

"The concession is as much a law of the land as any other statute placed on the books.

"The concession covers two principal phases: First, the right to explore and exploit national lands for oil purposes and calling for certain minimum expenditures, which have been made; second, certain franchises by way of import and export taxes.

"The company has exercised to a very small degree the right to take up national lands. In fact, all its oil production comes today from private lands, that is to say, from private owners who have been paid substantial sums for leases or royalties. Cancellation will not affect production.

The Smallest Share of Stock

In 1906 a suit was instituted by the United States Government against the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey under the Sherman Anti-Trust Laws, which resulted in a decision against the company and a decree that it should dissolve. In order to comply with the decree, the company in 1911-13 distributed pro-rata among its stockholders its entire holdings in the stock of 33 companies, among which was the Standard Oil Company of Nebraska.

The complexity of splitting up shares for distribution has filled many volumes of law and financial books, but in the final analysis the distribution was made on a basis proportionate to the percentages of the fractions involved in this distribution was 983,383, and in the case of the fractional share to the Ackerman and Coles brokerage firm the numerator equalled 1. This firm received a certificate for 1/983,383rd share, the value of which at that time was 1/98th of a cent. In this case the infinitesimal fraction was the result of a stock trade following an increase in the capital stock of one of the segregated companies.

France Desires To Prevent War, Declares Flandin

Explains Recent Talks In London For The Purpose Of Reinforcing Peace

M. Flandin, the French Prime Minister, returning from London by air, arrived at Le Bourget at 10.50 a.m. on February 4 and, after inspecting a guard of honor mounted by the 104th Air Regiment, motored into Paris. He was welcomed at Le Bourget by Mme. Flandin and several members of the Cabinet, who congratulated him on the success of the London conversations.

M. Laval returned to Paris by train the same evening, according to are article in the London Times.

In a broadcast address this evening, M. Flandin said:—

For some year Germany has considerably increased her armaments. She has, in practice, thrown off part of the obligations placed upon her by the Versailles Treaty.

In view of this fait accompli were we to resign ourselves to an armaments race, which, beside the burden it would place on the people, might be a danger for peace as soon as the equilibrium of armaments between two nations or groups of nations was broken? Did we, moreover, possess means to prevent this race?

"France sought in London to reinforce peace and prevent war. We had first to reinforce the system of guarantees and mutual assistance which support the League Covenant. To the Locarno Treaty has been added the proposed Danubian Pact negotiated in Rome and the proposed Eastern Pact. We noted with satisfaction the complete agreement and encouragement of the British Government in this policy.

"The British people are as convinced as our own that all there regional agreements must be embodied in the general Covenant of the League. We can therefore affirm together that the return of Germany to the League must form part of the general program.

"The French belief in the necessity of an international police force may someday be accepted. Unfortunately we have not yet reached that point. But we have readily reaffirmed our wish to conclude a general convention, freely discussed, for the limitation of armaments, and we have declared that France, like Great Britain, remains faithful to the declaration of December, 1932, on equality of rights within a system of security for all.

Defenders of Peace

"We keenly hope that negotiations for the conclusion of this general arms convention may be reopened shortly. I hope Germany will seize this opportunity to give proof of her desire for peace. That great nation must take a free and equal part in building up European security.

"In the troubled state of the world it is not real security to live under the threat of aerial bombardment. This was a capital and urgent problem. We very quickly came to an agreement, and I may say that we are equally prepared to conclude precise engagements which will have the merit, hitherto not attained, of defining immediate action against war.

"The defenders of peace will no longer be paralysed by procedure which might give a decisive advantage to the aggressor. The combned air forces of those who may have to defend peace should give them such evident superiority that no one will be tempted to abuse force.

Referring to the prospects of the proposed air convention, M. Flandin said that he could not doubt that the Powers invited to take part in it would agree to do so. "But," he added, "we agreed that the British and French Governments would confer together as soon as the answers were obtained. This affirmation of a common Franco-British will to organize an alliance of pacific peoples as a barrier to air warfare is, in my opinion, a decisive step on the road to peace." By dissipating the nightmare of a sudden air attack, M. Flandin concluded, the authors of the London Agreement must have relieved the anxieties of all his hearers.

There is no doubt that the results of the Franco-British meeting have given the greatest satisfaction in Paris, according to the London Times' Paris correspondent. The willingness of the British Government to join in an agreement for mutual assistance in case of sudden attacks from the air, and their acceptance of the principle that such assistance should be given immediately and not require a decision of the League Council, are especially satisfactory to the French.

The London declaration meets with almost unanimous praise, both in official quarters and in the Paris Press. If it is hailed as an example of fruitful collaboration between France and Great Britain, it is also commended for the moderation and the spirit of reciprocity, which, it is felt, cannot fail to impress the German Government with the good will of its authors. The agreement is variously described as "opening the way to a long period of peace"; "a great general plan, frankly based upon realities, which eludes no difficulty and in which everything is harmonized"; and "a return to good sense."

Reich's Return To Arms Talks Declared Vital

Powers Hope Concessions Will Bring Germany Back To Geneva

Undeniably the absense of Germany from the last Disarmament Conference rendered the task doubly difficult if not impossible, and although there are American proposals to proceed with the control of arms traffic and with budgetary limitation, an effort to bring back Germany has always been contemplated by Great Britain, France, Italy, and other nations.

Happily, Germany has shown itself willing to return to the League of Nations as well as to the Disarmament Conference, on condition that equality—theoretical at any rate—of arms was accorded, says the Christian Science Monitor.

But that means the rearmament of Germany, instead of the disarmament of others, it has been objected. If it merely meant the rearmament of Germany, it would certainly be an unfortunate outcome of the Conference. But it is also a preliminary step toward an agreement on arms, and unless this step is taken, there will be a race in arms. The choice is clear.

What Rearming Means

To talk of the text of the Versailles Treaty in this connection has, in the opinion of everyone with a sense of political realities, become pedantic. It is obvious that Germany could not be placed permanently in a position of inferiority. If others were heavily armed, in the name of self-defense, Germany would, sooner or later, invoke the same argument. Why should its neighbors arm against a disarmed and an unarmed Germany, while Germany be forbidden to arm against armed and increasingly arming neighbors?

In any case whether the military clauses of the treaty are repudiated or nominally maintained, the fact is that Germany has begun to rearm, and that there are only three courses now open to European nations:

1. To endeavor to disarm Germany by force—which means a so-called "preventive" war;

2. To avail themselves of their start on Germany and to keep well ahead in the race—which also, in the long rum, means war;

3. To come to an all-round agreement, treating Germany on a footing of equality—which means that there will be a real prospect of disarmament, in the broader sense, and of peace.

Long up in Air

The events which preceded and followed Germany's withdrawal from Geneva must be recalled in order to obtain an understanding of the present condition. For 14 years no effective decision had been reached, though many plans had been discussed. In December, 1932, a formula which purported to accord equal rights to Germany had been signed by France; but it was whittled away until it became almost meaningiess.

Ramsay MacDonald's plan of March 1, 1933, was generally accepted ,and Germany pressed for a "second reading," protesting against further postponement, on June 29, 1933. Unhappily, the Conference adjourned. During the summer, the most was made of " the disturbed conditions" in Europe, and it was urged that there should be a "probationary period."

Finally, on the resumption of the conference, proposals were introduced by which for an initial term of four years, the countries already disarmed—Germany, Austria, Hungary, and Bulgaria—were to remodel their armies on the short-service system, that is to say, the treaty provisions of a professional army imposed on them were to be scrapped, and a militia, in some respects similar to the conscript system of France, built up. These shortservice armies were to be doubled in number (which does not mean that they were to be stronger) and the permissible quantity of arms correspondingly increased. But they were still to be refused the right of posessing guns, tanks, airplanes, which others possessed.

Distinctions

These others, in the meantime, were merely to refrain from increasing their heavy aggressive weapons. In a second period—after four years—if all went well, the armed countries were to begin (on a scheme to be agreed later) to abolish heavy offensive weapons, and Germany and its fellow disarmed countries were then—and not till then—and not till then—to begin to acquire defensive weapons.

It is not surprising that this project was interpreted as simply putting off the process of disarmament for the armed nations, and as further weakening the disarmed nations engaged in transforming their limited military organization and as placing them under special one-sided control.

That is why Germany left the conference. It should be remembered that the question of the Hitler regime cannot properly be raised, since for 13 years before the Hitler regime there had been an opportunity of disarmament. The further delay in making a start, in conditions humiliating to Germany, might be prolonged if Germany's neighbors, at the end of four years, declared they were not satsfied.

The date of this resignation was Oct. 14. On Nov. 12 the German people in a national vote fully indorsed the action of the Government.

Phase Ended

Nevertheless diplomatic negotiations were not ruled off. They continued until April 17, 1934, when the French note peremptorily declining to reduce armaments if others rearmed, put an end to this phase of the proceedings.

The Disarmament Conference has since met but it has made no progress. It cannot make any progress on the main matter—which is that of quantitative and qualitative reduction—unless Germany is included in the pact, and Germany will only be included if it is allowed, in theory at least, an equal footing.

A "standstill" arrangement is inadequate, for it would not bind Germany. A general increase in armaments might be ultimately fatal, for Germany would be tempted to try to catch up.

Only a treaty of limitation and reduction, with Germany put on the same level as the rest, offers a prospect of safety.

That is why the return of Germany is necessary; and happily, Germany, under fair conditions, is not only willing but anxious to return to Geneva.

Chicago Union Head Killed In Gang War

Police Fear New Uprisings In City Underworld

Two blasts from a sawed-off shotgun fired by one of two assassins in broad daylight on one of Chicago's most thickly traveled motor highways on Feb. 4 ended the turbulent career of Thomas E. Maloy, business agent and "czar" of the Chicago Moving Picture Operators Union.

The killing, which was reminiscent of gang slayings in the heydey of Capone's underworld rule, caused police to fear a new war of extermination among racketeers after a long period of comparative peace, according to the New York Times.

As a result, detective squads went through the city tonight rounding up the remnants of the old Capone gang in their search for the killers of Maloy.

The dead man, whose union rule of twenty years was marked by sluggings, bombings and murder, was shot by the unidentified men who drove up beside his limousine as he was driving north on the outer drive opposite the World's Fair buildings.

While hundreds of automobiles were speeding in both directions a volley of shotgun slugs struck Maloy in the back of the head. Several bullets from a pistol in the hands of the second gunman shattered the window glass of the car.

Maloy, who was 45 years old, died instantly. His fingers slipped from the steering wheel and his car veered to the left side of the road as he slumped against the door. His companion, Dr. Emmet Quinn, a dentist, who is also a steward in the union, pressed the foot brake and stopped the car.

The killers sped north on the drive and were out of sight before passing motorists could organize a pursuit.

Ten Slugs in His Head

An autopsy at the County Morgue showed that ten of the shotgun slugs had entered Maloy's head. Several others had grazed and furrowed his right ear. No indications were found that any of the pistol bullets had struck him.

The shooting occurred shortly after 1 p.m. while Maloy and Dr. Quinn were driving from their homes to their offices.

Austria Disturbed By New Plea For Hapsburg Prince

Von Starhemberg's Remark At Heimwehr Meeting Is Against Policy

The Austrian government's policy of keeping all reference to a possible Hapsburg restoration out of the newspapers was disturbed recently by the publication of Prince Ernst Ruediger von Starhemberg's declaration at a private meeting of Heimwehr leaders that a Hapsburg restoration is eventually essential, but that the Heimwehr, not legitimists, would effect it.

Legitimists have always been forced by the internal and external political situation to couple propaganda with the reminder: "The question is not immediate." Their leaders, according to G. E. R. Gedye in the New York Times, had to give the following warning, much like Gambetta's to the French concerning Alsace-Lorraine after 1871: "Always think of it; never speak of it."

Although Austrian legitimists are working feverishly today to effect an early restoration, their work is still underground. Their object is to perfect plans for a restoration with the least possible publicity in order to cause a minimum of alarm among the new States that inherited former Hapsburg property.

Therefore the Austrian Government, while allowing even prominent officers and high officials to take part in monarchist demonstrations, forbid the press to report them. The dfficulties of the monarchists are complicated by the desirability that Archduke Otto, while giving declarations likely to satisfy Austrian legitimist Fascists, should avoid upsetting Hungarian parliamentarian legitimists.

Preparation Easy

Monarchist caution does not imply inaction. With practically the entire government monarchist at heart and equipped with absolute powers it is not difficult to prepare everything to facilitate an eventual restoration.

Otto has declared that he will return to Austria the moment the anti-Hapsburg law is abolished, which the government has announced its intention of doing at an appropriate moment.

Everywhere legitimists are nominated for key positions in State, church and newspapers. The most important are the nominations to Mayoralties, for these legitimist Mayors will next Autumn choose a new head of the Austrian Federal State to replace President Wilhelm Miklas. There is little doubt that they will select some one who will regard it as his task to prepare the country for Otto.

In Little Entente circles, it is emphasized that all attempts at Geneva to give practical effect to the decisions of the Rome conference broke down largely because the Little Entente wanted to know whether it was intended that the guarantee of Austria should apply also to a monarchist Austrian, and this was not answered. In Belgrade fears prevail that Premier Mussolini and Foreign Minister Laval may have decided to tolerate a Hapsburg restoration in Austria if preceded by a declaration by Otto renouncing claims to an extension of Hapsburg territories beyond present-day Austria. It is certain Otto would not give the declaration; Austrian legitimists now seek to pacify the Little Entente by proposing a formula for restoration in Austria alone as a purely Austrian affair. In exchange they would recognize any extension of his realm to be a matter for international negotiation.

Germany's Stand

There is reason to believe Germany's response to the invitation to adhere to the Austrian independence and non-interference pacts will be requests as to the attitude of Belgrade, Prague, Bucharest and Budapest on a Hapsburg restoration.

Germany would recall past declarations by Premier Bogolyub Yeftitch of Yugoslavia that "restoration means war" and similar statements by Foreign Minister Edouard Benes of Czechoslovakia, taking the line that Germany could not undertake the obligation to maintain Austria's independence if a Hapsburg restoration is likely to involve war.

Hungary's Reaction

Count Anton Sigray, authorized leader of the Hungarian legitimists, told a New York Times correspondent in Budapest on Jan. 25 that "a great majority of the Hungarian nation is legitimist."

Asked whether the Little Entente had not demanded assurance that the question of restoration would not be regarded as a purely internal one for Austria or Hungary, Count Sigray said:

"Maybe the Little Entente made such a demand. But it certainly did not receive satisfaction from the great powers. I have very good reasons for believing that the Italian standpoint is that in Austria at any rate restoration is an internal question for the country to decide for itself.

"Recovery of the Saar stirred up German nationalism again, and will mean that there will be fresh attempts to find a road to the East. The only effectual barrier to German ambitions is restoration of the monarchy in Austria.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Labyrinthian Coin

The Philistines of the Bible were natives of Crete. The capital of Crete was Cnossus, famous in antiquity for its labyrinth featured on its coins. The labyrinth sheltered the Minotaur, a monster having a human body and a bull's head which devored annually seven youths and seven maidens sent as tribute by Athens to Cnossus. The monster was slain by Theseus, one of its intended victims, to whom the daughter of the Cretan King gave a sword and a clue of thread as a love gift.

The Perfect School Boy

Master William Campbell, youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Campbell, Grangemouth, Scotland, recently left school after completing 12 years of perfect attendance, and thus surpassed the remarkable attendance records held by other members of the family. The Campbell's 12 children have a total of 107 years of perfect school records—William with 12 years, eight children had 9 years each, two had 8 years each, and one child had 7 years at school without a break.

Official recognition of this unique record was made by the Stirlingshire Educational Committee.

VETERAN GLOBE TROTTER AT 7

He is now at the Imperial hotel with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Lowe. Giving an interview while on the run ("the young man despises sitting still) Albert recalled 15 ocean liners and as many friendly captains, declared he preferred boats to hotels for hotels were "too fussy," and feared that now he might have to settle down in a house for a few months because "the folks liko Tokyo."

Albert was born in Brazil, spent six months in a boarding school in England, and a year in India. While other lads of his age were playing with blocks and tinker toys, he was becoming adept at shuffle board and deck tennis. He said, "Oh yes, I always go in for deck games; they help kill time on the crossings."

Big brown eyes in an animated face, Albert is too active and healthy to be a precocious child yet he could probably tie any ocean captain in the art of spinning yarns of ports and people. His father is with United Artists Corporation.

At his demonstration of his powers at Hibiya Public Hall last Saturday a large and responsive audience turned out. TEA CEREMONY SET TO MUSIC

The traditional Japanese tea ceremony is to be set to music!

This innovation in the historic tea ceremony of Japan will be demonstratied next Monday at the meeting of the Tokyo Women's club at the Y. W. C. A. by a Japanese tea master whose name was not divulged at the meeting last Monday.

The tea ceremony to music will be shown following the annual business meeting at 3 p.m.

The old Russian drama and the importance of drama in the Soviet Union was discussed at the club's meeting Monday by Miss Ruth Thompson of Tsuda college who is a pioneer member of the club.

Her talk was made more effective by reading given to show what the drama was like before and after the revolution. Mrs. William G. Hillen read a scene from Chekov's "Cherry Orchard" and Mrs. John Perry Hubbard read from Mikitenko's "Girls of Our Country," which proved the vitality of the modern Soviet drama.

Drama in Russia, Miss Thompson said, is reckoned either before or after the October Revolution. A Soviet writer has declared that the intelligentsia of the world regard the U.S.S.R. as the only country which can save art, as the only country from which can come new worlds and new hopes in the field of the theater. He declared futher that the Soviet theater will justify expectation, Miss Thompson related.

She spoke of the enormous subsidies with which the U.S.S.R. has recognized the theater. In 1933, it gave 8½ million roubles to the theater.

"In the old Russian drama, the theater was for the upper classes. The actors were often serfs, sold by their masters. Yet great actors came of these groups. Today, however, the theater exists for the common people—it tells of their dreams, their works, their toil. It is regarded by the government as an important sector on the front of education."

In Moscow last year, Miss Thompson said, there were five opera houses, 49 theaters for drama, three for musical comedy, one for satire, and one for Jewish, Tartar, Lettish, and gypsy drama. There were 168 theater schools in the country with a student enrollment of 25,000, 65 per cent of whom were from the working classes.

"The type of heroes has changed in the 16 years," Miss Thompson continued. "Today we have the collective hero, the industrial worker, the collective farmer. The ideas are those of socialistic realism. During the Civil war, the theater had to keep up the morale of the people and it was a form of propaganda but today propaganda is being replaced by plays which show new social conditions and relations.

"Maxim Gorky is the great source of inspiration to the new dramatists. Young writers send him manuscripts not only in the U.S.S.R. but from other countries as well."

Miss Thompson spoke of the Moscow Art theater which now divises honors with the Meyerhold theater which exemplifies the extreme ideas even to the extent of doing away with curtains and footlights in order to bring the audience and the actors closer. She also discussed the many children's theaters, the Punch and Judy shows, the marionettes and the puppets.

Mrs. J. D. Hitch, president, presided and Mrs. T. D. Walser, librarian, announced that members may now take out two old and one new books at one time and that any six months old book may be renewed.

Princeton Five Beats Harvard

Tigers Win League Game On Home Court And Tie For 3d With Dartmouth

N.Y. Herald Tribune

PRINCETON, N. J., Feb. 9—By beating a faltering Harvard five, 27 to 18, in the University gym tonight, Princeton moved into a tie with Dartmouth for third place in the Eastern Intercollegiate League.

Snapping a three-game losing streak, the Tigers showed an improved passing attack and a much stronger defense than in their defeat by Williams. Captain Johnny Grebauskas, Orange and Black leader, dribbled under the basket and sank his shot one minute after the start to break the ice and give Princeton a lead it never relinquished.

With Grebauskas, Ed Murray and Bud Sauter tallying six points each to tie with Captain Dick Boys, of the Crimson, for high scoring laurels, Princeton had a 19 to 9 lead at half-time after Ridolfi and Murray had dropped field goals and Sauter a foul goal in quick succession just before the end of the period.

In the second period the play was fast. Ken Sandbach, sophomore ace recently returned to the wars, and Murray played brilliantly on the delense for Princeton. Dick Fletcher did likewise for the Crimson.

The line-up:

London Backs All Her Pledges Made To India

Ultimate Dominion Status Assured By Government As Debate Begins

Crowded benches and eager faces at the opening debate on the Government of India Bill in the British House of Commons testified to the fact that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's Cabinet has taken a momentous decision regarding the United Kingdom's great eastern dependency.

This decision is to stand by all the pledges of constitutional advance that have been made to India, including that highly controversial promise of ultimate "dominion status," given by Lord Irwin Nov. 1, 1929, on behalf of the late Labor Government, says a recent London dispatch to the Christian Science Monitor.

The Government of India Bill has thus become even more important than had been expected since "dominion status," however slowly it may be introduced, is held to imply eventually complete national independence within the Empire, such as exists already in the case of Canada and other fully autonomous members of the British Commonwealth of Nations.

Expected To Pass

The bill is being opposed, but the Cabinet is in a position to force its passage into law and counts on doing so this session, without material modification.

The bill itself implements in its entirety the scheme of self-government for India as laid down in the report of the recent select committee of both houses of the British Parliament. The only material modification it makes is in defining the functions of the new Federal Court. These functions are now to be confined to disputes as to the application or interpretation of the new constitution.

The bill itself when passed into law is to be the authoritative record of this constitution alike as regards first, the 11 autonomous federating provinces; second, the central federation, and third, the province of Burma, an area which is to become an autonomous state apart from India.

Chief critics of the bill are Right-Wing Conservatives who are ordinarily firm adherents of the Government. So strong is the feeling aroused that Mr. Randolph Churchill, a rising young journalist, son of Mr. Winston Churchill, former Chancellor of the Exchequer, is standing as an independent candidate at the coming parliamentary byeection at Wavertree, Lancashire, in order to test the views of British textile workers on this question.

These workers depend largely upon business with India, and are therefore closely concerned.

The bill is believed to be a record one in length, containing as it does over 400 clauses, but the Government hopes to pass it into law before next July, thereby clearing the way for a general election next year.

Full Blast in Autumn

After the bill passes no time is to be lost in preparing new provincial voting lists and rearranging governmentl offices. This should all be completed by next autumn, by which time the British Government hopes to have all the provincial administrations in full operation.

Transitional arrangements are then to come into effect to bridge some months that are expected to elapse between the setting up of the new provincial governments and the starting of the federal center, the body which is to link the provinces alike with one another and with the existing semi-independent Indian states. This interval is chiefly for settling the terms on which each individual Indian state enters the new federation.

The British Government hopes to get successfully completed within a few months these negotiations and also all other statutory requirements preliminary to starting the Federal Government. A resolution for bringing the federation into actual being is then to be submitted to both houses of the British Parliament.

Should any hitch occur—for example if the Indian states should prove recalcitrant or if economic condition in India should become such as to threaten the solvency of the new government—then the situation is to be reconsidered. But smooth passage for the whole scheme is now expected.

The greatest experiment ever made in the world, in welding together of masses of diverse human elements into a single self-governing whole, is thus in a fair way toward achievement.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Lotta's Fountain

The $10,000 fountain donated by and named after Lotta Grabtree, famous actress, stands in a central location in the city of San Francisco and was erected with the gold nuggests and $50 gold slugs which miners tossed at Lotta's feet in appreciation of her acting.

Lotta was born in New York in 1847 and went to California in 1853 to join her father who had preceded her in the gold rush of the early fifties. She made her first stage appearance in Robbit Creek, a Californian mining settlement, when she was 8. When she died in 1924 she left a fortune of $4,000,000 which she bequeathed to charity.

mented, nowadays, by the arrivals and departures by our inland air routes. The air-liners of France, Germany, Belgium, and Holland fly in and out of Croydon as well as the aircraft of our British services; while big land-planes and flying-boats carry their loads on in stages for 8,000 miles to Cape Town, or for 13,000 miles across the Eastern air route to Egypt, India, and Australia.

At the present time, following upon the recent duplication of the Empire services between London and Calcutta and London and Johannesburg, the officials at Croydon have to deal with either an incoming or outgoing Empire service every day of the week. On Sundays, in fact, two Empire services are now scheduled—one outward to Africa and one inward along the same route.

"Traffic continues to grow steadily on our Empire routes", explained an Imperial Airways official. "Heavy bookings have been recorded on all our duplicated services since their inception. Recent figures show an all-round increase of more than 30 per cent on the route to India and the East, and of over 40 per cent on the Africa service; while statistics which have just been compiled show that the air-mails at Christmas-time established new records on the Empire routes, their total weight, in and out of Croydon, amounting to approximately fifteen tons. It is interesting to note, from comparative figures, how air-mail dispatches from this country have been growing in recent years. In 1931 the number of letters dispatched from this country by air was a little over 2,000,000. By 1932 the figure had gone up to 3,000,000. By 1933 it was 4,000,000. And by the end of 1934, as already mentioned, the annual total had reached 6,000,000.

Each night at London's air-port, when darkness begins to fall, the Traffic Controller in his tower moves over certain switches, and the aerodrome is illuminated for night-flying. Then you see one of the great air-liners of Imperial Airways, its saloons lit cosily by shaded lights, vanish into the darkness en route for Paris, its occupants dining in the air—served by deft, white-coated stewards—just as they would in any hotel or restaurant on the ground. And a similar night service brings passengers by air from Paris to London.

Night Planes Leave

In addition to night passenger-planes, powerful air-freighters fly off from Croydon during the hours of darkness for destinations far across the continent, carrying mails and urgently-consigned goods. This means that letters and parcels posted in London after business houses close, are delivered early next morning at cities hundreds of miles across Europe.

During the summer, in the early hours each morning, aircraft with loads of London's daily newspapers leave Croydon for pleasure resorts on the continent, so that visitors to these places can read their usual newspapers at their breakfast-tables, just as they would if they were at home.

British Policy In India Is Outlined By Baldwin

by prejudice or by lack of faith and courage. Lately I came across some words written by one great parliamentary figure, who in our own time played a leading role in Indian affairs, of another who had played an even greater role more than 100 years earlier. Motley wrote of Burke that he "had succeeded in laying the foundations once and for all of a just, philanthropic, and responsible public opinion in England with reference to India." "Once and for all," "a just, philanthropic, and responsible public opinion with reference to India." We are right, surely, in interpreting the mind of the British people today as intending that those words should be as true of our own time as they were of the century that separated Burke and Morley.

Historic Policy

I shall not, I think, be for wrong in summing up the "just, philanthropic, and responsible public opinion" in England today as follows. In accordance with our historic policy and with the object of keeping our Empire together we have given India certain pledges. Those pledges must be fulfilled. It is at this juncture a question not of the direction of our advance but of the distance that we can now go forward. On this question we have had inquiries lasting over seven years. Those inquiries have been as thorough and as authoritative as it has been possible to make them. At the end of it all there has been a Committee of both Houses of our own Parliament, most powerfully constituted and containing many of the most experienced and trusted of our political leaders. That Committee has stated in cogent and impressive language that not only are the proposals it recommends the best and wisest course, but that they are in effect the only practical course. Whatever our individual doubts and anxieties may have been we shall find no surer guide than this. We shall gain nothing from any prolongation of the controversy.

And we shall support Parliament in giving effect to the plan which is based upon so much authority and experience. That, I believe, is the essence of the opinion that prevails today in Great Britain on the subject of Indian policy.

Petticoats Come Into Style Again

Paris Fashions Feature Them With White Stockings For Afternoon Frocks

Lanvin revives petticoats in a big way with all that they imply—extreme womanliness, modesty, grace, dignity. Long white petticoats and white stockings are worn with full flaring afternoon frocks of dark taffeta, according to a Paris dispatch to the New York Times.

Matching tulle pantelettes, showing below the hems, also are noted. The majority of her skirts are wide swinging and longer than others that are shown. She foretells a lower waistline, with many bodices prolonged to the hipbones with belts at the natural waist.

The late Victorian epoch, translated into Russian, describes much of her new mode. Long Russian tunics, buttoned in the back, show a narrow contrasting colored under skirt. Rich hostess gowns suggest icon colorings, metal brocades in these and in her Black patent leather Russian boots and vizored caps lend dash to pastel wool sports suits with capes or flared, hiplength jackets.

Coats Fasten at Chest

Coats or capes fastened only over the chest and wide open below are featured. The fronts of dresses are often emphasized with wide panels of horizontal soutache braiding.

Beautiful afternoon frocks have full fronts shirred on just below the waistline, and full shirred blouse fronts and long peasant puffed sleeves complete these. Long double-puffed sleeves are also notable. These gowns of plain crepe are an agreeable change from the plethora of prints.

Prints invariably show fancy cut-out hems following their pattern.

An interesting new silhouette has a full-looped free-panel drape attached to the front of the waistline, flowing to three-quarters of the length of the slender skirt, lending it a harem-trouser effect. This line is featured by anklelength afternoon and floor-length evening gowns. Jeweled or gold or silver studs embroidered in bands from the neckline to the wrist on long bishop sleeves are featured in simple crepe evening gowns and trailing faille evening wraps or jackets.

Cloth of Silver for Evening

The colors are dull gray greens, geranium reds, grays, pastel blues, with much navy and white. Cloth of silver appears in evening ensembles or for trimmings.

Worth continues to sponsor lingerie petticoats with silk evening gowns. His colored lace petticoats, worn with patterned taffeta gowns, are alluring. He revives hip yokes with wider skirts and gives importance to hems by wide stitched or stiffened bands.

His evening skirts show an enormous circular fullness. These are enhanced by a slender waist fitted to the torso and much bosom drapery. He also shows a group of dinner suits in dark crepe with slender skirts and gay blouses hidden by a bolero or back-buttoned cape. Sports suits of fancy cotton or linen have long tailored coats split up the back, showing contrasting skirts.

Smart checked or striped surrah afternoon suits have much gathered fullness in front of both skirt and the jacket. These are worn with frilly-bosomed organdie blouses and poke sailor hats. Leopard capes and belts are chic fur touches for Spring.

Brought 4144 Babies Into The World

Doctor George G. Barnett of Ishpeming, Michigan has brought 4144 babies into the world, a record that is as extraordinary to the layman as it is to the practitioner. Dr. Barnett graduated from Rush Medical School in 1885 and has kept exhaustive records of his obstetrical cases since 1886. When he retired in 1922, he found that he had attended 4077 mothers and 4144 babies, including twins and triplets.

The Journal of the Michigan Society printed a detailed article on Dr. Barnett's observations, and found that his mortality rate was 1.2 per cent as against an outside average of about 5 per cent.

Dr. Barnett's report contains numerous authentic and interesting cases, including babies weighing 14, 15 and 16 pounds at birth.

U.S. Population Gains 20,000,000 Since 1930

You can take it from the United States Census Bureau that surprisingly the population of the United States has jumped up nearly 20,000,000 since 1930.

The latest census estimate places the population at 141,574,000 persons, compared with the 1930 census of 122,775,046, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

This fact was disclosed Feb. 4 when the State Department asked Congress to increase by $1127 the appropriation for American membership in the Pan American Union. Contributions by each member nation are on the basis of $1.20 a thousand population.

together, there are features in the situation which may tend to keep us apart."

"In the case of Great Britain," he declared, "an old friendship with Japan has predisposed our people to a greater extent perhaps than yours to be sympathetic with the difficulties of Japan's economic situation.

"This is a circumstance which causes American opinion to be mistrustful of British intentions and actions.

"On the other hand, the fact that Great Britain is a member of the League and the United States is not causes opinion in my country in its turn to be mistrustful of American intentions and doubtful of the extent to which your country is prepared to share the responsibility of solving this difficult problem."

Vienna Socialists Display Strength

Many Meetings Held In Forest In Memory Of Riot Victims Dspite Police Watch

Despite all government efforts to prevent them, Socialist and Communist demonstrations against the present regime were held over the week-end, it was learned on Feb. 11, in memory of the anniversary of the destruction of the Socialist party of Austria last Feb. 12.

The Socialist plan was to prove to the Heimwehr, Fascists and police that Socialism was not dead without exposing the illegal party to police reprisals that would prove too costly. That is why the chief point in the official Socialist instructions for Feb. 12 is that all lights should be extinguished in token of mourning for workers killed a year ago, says a despatch to the New York Times.

Hundreds of Socialist meetings were arranged to take plase on Feb. 10 mostly of parties on skis in the Vienna Forest. There was also a special arrangement for the distribution of anti-government literature.

Three hundred uniformed police were on duty at all the main entrances to the forest, ready to dash to any spot where they might be called for by gendarme and Heimwehr patrols. Most of the Socialist meetings, however, passed off without disturbance, although 150 Socialists were arrested when leaving such a meeting on skis at Kaltenleutgeben in the forest, and 120 more at the Leopoldsberg.

Thousands of leaflets of "the united front against Fascism" (recently formed between a section of the Socialists, the now illegal Republican Defense Corps and the Communists), which called for liberation of all proletarian prisoners, cessation of cuts in wages and unemployed benefits, abandonment of the government's plans for reduction of sickness benefits and "punishment of the murderers of Austrian workers."

The signatory bodies swore "to honor the Austrian workingmen martyrs, hate eternally their murderers and hold faith with the oppressed workers at all costs."

In Meidling, a big working-class Vienna suburb, an illuminated sign displayed across a street proclaimed: "We shall come again—Vienna Socialists." Thousands of leaflets with this inscription were distributed: Other leaflets called for a proletarian dictatorship to replace the Fascist dictatorship.

In Wels, Upper Austria, the electric light plant was put out of action by Socialist sabotage, as was the case in Steinfeld, Carinthia. In both cases it was officially stated that avalanches were responsible. One person was reported killed.

Killer Takes Body 2,000 Miles In Car

Victim Stuffed In Trunk, He Goes From Michigan To Pacific Coast Before Arrest

A 2,000-mile dash for liberty with the body of the man whom he admits slaying because of jealousy ended on Feb. 7 for Clarence Frechette, 25, Michigan's "flying bandit."

The body was that of Robert Brown, 24, of Kalamazoo, truck line operator and employer of Frechette.

In a stolen motor car containing three unsuspecting passengers and a trunk into which the body of Brown, the 180-pound victim, had been stuffed, Frechette drove up to the California line at midnight and into the arms of waiting officers near Truckee, says the New York Times.

As if they suspected nothing, the officers asked Frechette and his passengers to come into their checking station and warm themselves. Then one official pried open the trunk to peer directly into the lifeless eyes of the victim.

Pistols were shoved into the ribs of Frechette and his passenger, John Malcom Rivas, a Salt Lake City miner. Frechette at first denied he was the man sought, and said that he was Brown.

At the same time officers identified him as the man who assaulted Harry W. Anderson, flying instructor, during a fight at Kalamazoo several years ago.

Planned to "Ditch" Car

When the plane was 2,000 feet up, Frechette, it was alleged, seized a hammer, knocked Anderson senseless, landed the ship in haphazard fashion and went through it for valuables. He was sentenced to serve six to ten years, but was released after serving his minimum term.

After some sharp questioning, Captain Joseph Blake of the State highway patrol announced that Frechette had confessed the killing.

In the purported confession and insubsequent remarks to interviewers, the dapper 130-pound former convict admitted:

1. That he calmly stuffed Brown's body in the trunk of the automobile and headed westward, intending to "ditch" the car and its burden in California and flee to the Orient.

2. That he held up two drug stores and a restaurant in Denver, obtaining $41 to help finance his strange trip.

3. That he went to a dance in Salt Lake City, leaving the automobile and its ghastly cargo parked in the street outside the dance hall.

4. That he picked up the three passengers in Salt Lake City, agreeing to take them to the Coast for $6 each.

5. That he sent a telegram from Elko, Nev., to Brown's father, Roy Brown in Michigan, signing it "Robert" and asking that $60 be telegraphed to him.

The telegram led to his arrest.

Car's Radio Is Played

All the way from Michigan to the California line he posed as a model young man trying to get ahead in the world by seeking business for a trucking firm. Blithely he played the radio of the automobile. He was polite and talkative to his passengers.

The whole party was brought here. Frechette's other two passengers, Mrs. Victor Messenger of Alameda, Cali., and her 4-year-old son, Raymond, were released from technical custody the same day.

Apparently little the worse for his eight-day flight and a night of questioning, Frechette dozed in his cell for a short time, but awoke soon and talked freely to interviews.

"I'm not sorry for what I did," he said. "I'd have done it again, and, if I hadn't, somebody else would have."

Again he went over the story of the killing, at Howell, Mich., Jan. 29.

"We were on the outskirts of town. Brown remarked about his conquest of many women and I told him there was one beyond his reach.

"He asked who, and I told him I mean my girl, Grace Curran."

Frechette said Brown then remarked with an oath that he had been intimate with the girl.

"I knocked him down," the asserted confession then went on. "He crawled to the car and reached in a pocket and grabbed that gun. (A .32-calibre pistol that was found in the car.)

Put Body in Trunk

"He pointed it at me and I grabbed his hand. I don't know whether it was his finger or mine that did it, but the gun fired twice.

I put him in the trunk. I didn't know whether he was dead or alive. I knew if I was caught, I'd spend the rest of my life in prison."

Frechette said he spent that night in Kalamazoo, going to a movie. Then with the car, which belonged to Brown's mother, Mrs. Mabel Brown, he started West.

When Brown's parents received the telegram from Elko, they notified Sheriff Charles W. Struble of Kalamazoo and the Sheriff asked California officers to be on the lookout for Frechette and the missing automobile.

Bermuda, Without Cars, Puts Up A Traffic Light

Despite the ban on automobiles, which leaves Bermuda virtually free of traffic hazards, the island joined the campaign of Major Leslie Hore-Belisha, British Minister of Transport, to make streets safe for pedestrians late in January this year.

The city fathers inaugurated a new "Belisha beacon," of the type recently put in service in London, at Hamilton's busiest intersection, whose tangle of bicycles and antique horse drawn carriages greets new arrivals, says the New York Times.

Looming high over the adjacent dockside, the new beacon glitters in red paint with a legend, "Keep Left," emblazoned over a glass face illumined from within. Imported from Cardiff, it is the only traffic beacon on the island.

Sally Rand Holds Dance A Business

Her Bubble Specialty Is Just Sensible Merchandising, She Tells Enthralled Executives

Two hundred members of the Sales Executives Club of New York listened in respectful silence in the Hendrik Hudson Room of the Hotel Roosevelt recently as Sally Rand, fan and bubble dancer, disclosed how she merchandised Sally Rand.

It was a dignified business talk couched in business terminology. Miss Rand (Helen Beck in private life) discussed percentages, sales methods, the value of advertising, organization building, business charts and business equipment—and their relation to bubble dancing, according to a story in the New York Times which follows:

The five-foot blonde, cool and dignified in a dark-tailored business suit and snap-brim gray felt hat, waited patiently until the echoes of humorous introductions had died away and then she began her talk, her voice slightly husky. She spoke extemporaneously.

"I realized at the outset," Miss Rand said, "that 90 per cent of the merchandise that is sold in this country is sold to women; that sales talks, for that reason, must be directed at women. In my case, that fact presented obvious difficulties.

"And I decided that I had to advertise, since advertising is the secret of successful merchandising but I realized that in my advertising I would have to use lots of white space. Still, I believed I had something salable. All I needed was a new scheme for merchandising it."

Selecting the Market

Casting about in her mind for the best possible place to do her merchandising, the speaker said, she recalled the business axiom that the quickest way to get a head start in any industry is to present the product before the largest possible number of persons. Therefore she decided to go to the World Fair at Chicago.

All this, spoken in a smooth but business-like contralto, ended the smiles of the business men. Their pipes went out and the lights in their cigarettes died as they leaned forward to hear the Rand success story, told in their language.

"Well, I knew I had something to sell and I had decided on a place where I would find the most potential buyers," Miss Rand continued. "I made certain connections in Chicago—I'll go so far as to admit they were political connections—and got my chance.

"When the World Fair was nearing its end I was faced with the unpleasant prospect of falling back into obscurity. I didn't want that. So I did what any merchant would have done. I extended my organization. I started hiring other people."

She bought "specialized training"—a publicity man, an orchestra, a chorus, she said, and "let the ones who knew their specialty perform it without interference."

"That," Miss Rand explained, "is the secret of the good executive. It worked out that way for me in my industry. I know it's strange to speak of fan dancing and bubble dancing as an industry, but to me it is just that; an industry with a large income."

How Bubble Dance Was Born

When the popularity of the fan dance died, Miss Rand declared, she decided the only way to save her industry was to find a new "twist" to keep it alive. She invested between $3,000 and $3,500 in experimenting with sixty-inch rubber balloons.

"That was a real merchandising problem," she said. "At the start I learned that the largest balloons available were only thirty-six inches in diameter and were too large and thick for my purposes. They were target balloons made for the U. S. Navy and U. S. Army, and they were opaque.

Miss Rand wanted translucent balloons. And they had to be light. The target baloons were heavy and lacked the ethereal quality she believed was necessary to make her new dance effective. After having spent about $3,500 she got what she wanted.

"I have been successful," Miss Rank added soberly, "and I am grateful for my success. I have had some experiences that I wish I never had had, but that would be true in any business."

When the dancer had ended her talk, luncheon guests crowded around and congratulated her. She accepted their praise after the manner of one business man speaking to another and got to talking about the inroads made on her earnings by income taxes.

That struck a sympathetic note and long after the hall had been emptied, except for the earnest group around her, Miss Rand stayed to exchange views on the tax evil with other business executives.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Never Too Old To Learn And Work

Mrs. Emma McMahon always believed that a person is not only never too old to learn, but never too old to work, and even at the exceedingly ripe old age of 109 she continued to work every day and earn her own living. She worked daily at the Goodwill Industries Building, 1915 Main St., Kansas City, Mo., patching men's clothing, and she not only enjoyed life thoroughly but enjoyed accomplishing some good for the less fortunate. When she celebrated her 108th birthday at Thanksgiving time in 1929, it was suggested that those present at the gathering write out briefly what they had to be thankful for. Mrs. McMahon's note of thanks was: "I'm thankful for patches to put on breeches, but I'd be more thankful if they'd always match."

Mrs. McMahon died a few months after her 109th birthday.

Washington Monument Tip Is Well Preserved

WASHINGTON, — The aluminum tip of Washington Monument was found to be remarkably well-preserved when inspected recently and the engraved inscription recording its placement on Dec. 6, 1884, appeared as sharp and clear after cleaning as if it were cut only a short time ago, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

Advantage was taken of the scaffolding and other arrangements made for cleaning the monument, to climb to the metal cap 555 feet above the ground. Metallurgists from the United States Bureau of Standards and the Aluminum Company of America found the only blemish to be a mark on the extreme point made by lightning.

A thin gray oxide or aluminum rust, was found protecting the pure, silver-bright metal underneath. It formed a hard weather-resisting outer shield. The inspection was made at the request of Sol Bloom, director of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission.

General Motors Hands Workers $11,000,000

The General Motors Corporation distributed on Feb. 8 approximately $11,000,000 to about 30,000 employes under its savings and investment plan, Alfred P. Sloan Jr., president, announced.

In announcing the distribution, Mr. Sloan referred to President Roosevelt's advocacy of greater social security, according to New York Times.

"The objective of the General Motors savings and investment plan, now in its sixteenth year of operation," Mr. Sloan said, "is to provide financial competence under adversity. It offers the possibilities of protection against unemployment as well as provision against the time when old age makes work impossible. It is a mutual plan between management and employe—each making a contribution toward the objective.

"I am convinced that it is the duty of all branches of industry to recognize more and more the importance, not only from the social standpoint but in its own interests, of providing greater social security.

"Our experience has indicated that a mutual plan is not only feasible but creates an excellent opportunity of thrift and a sense of responsibility on the part of those participating, which adds materially to the excellent relations and morale of the organization. Furthermore, it develops self-reliance—it is in no sense paternalistic.

"Each employe who in 1929 saved $25 per month, amounting to $300 for the year—the maximum permitted—receives, in this present settlement, the original $300, plus $321.52 in benefits contributed by the employer, of which $114.35 represents interest.

In other words, each employe who five years ago saved $300 under this plan now receives $621.52.

"The possibilities of this plan may be realized through the fact that, as General Motors employes entered the depression, at the beginning of 1930, they had accumulated a reserve of approximately $75,000,000 to tide them over the following emergency. In addition to this, there were available equities to the extent of $15,000,000 that had been diverted toward the purchase of homes.

"From the time the plan was put into effect to date, the distribution to employes, covering both maturity and interim settlements, has aggregated $215,000,000, of whch $126,000,000 represented the employes' savings and the balance of $89,000,000 interest and investment fund credits paid by the corporation.

"In normal times, over 90 per cent of the entire General Motors organization has availed itself of this opportunity for protection against contingencies."

Poland Gives Added Power To President

Senate Moves Along Way Toward Long-Promised New Constitution

Another milestone on the leisurely road leading to a new constitution for Poland was reached recently when the Senate adopted with certain modifications the draft passed by the Sejm just a year ago, says the Warsaw correspondent of Christian Science Monitor.

The changes introduced by the Senate mostly tend to enhance the powers of the President of the Republic. In addition to the right to convene and dissolve Parliament, to appoint the President of the Supreme Court and the Commander-in-Chief he will now be entitled on his own initiative to issue decrees having the force of law. According to the text passed by the Sejm, presidential decrees had to be countersigned by the Premier and the Minister of the Department concerned.

The Senate's amendment must be approved by the Sejm before becoming effective, but no difficulties are expected in this connection.

An important question still left unsettled, however, is the numbers and method of election of the Senate. According to the law as originally passed by the Sejm, two-thirds of the Senators were to be nominated by the Presideent and the remaining one-third by an electorial college consisting exclusively of individuals (mostly soldiers) who—like the old Romans—have "deserved well of their country."

Marshal Joseph Pilsudski strongly criticized this method of election as impracticable. In deference to his wishes, the Senate has now put through an amendment to the effect that the numbers and method of election of the Senators shall be fixed by a separate law which shall also indicate what categories of citizens have the right to vote and to be elected.

This proviso leaves room for considerable further discussion and meanwhile the new constitution is, of course, in abeyance.

While reform of the existing constitution adopted in March, 1921, is generally regarded as desirable, there is no widespread public interest in the matter. Meanwhile, the 1921 Constitution is for all practical purposes abrogated. In particular, the preponderance it gives to the Legislature as compared with the Executive has been completely reversed. The length of the Diet's sessions have been drastically curtailed and not only has the Government a large majority in that body but it has been granted power to govern by decree when the Diet is not in session.

Hoover Role Now Is Average Man's

Ex-President Describes Day Of Visiting As Merely That Of A Typical Citizen

Herbert Hoover spent February 11 what he termed "a private citizen's average day" on his first visit to New York since March, 1933.

Arising early, the former President, eschewing his customary morning walk, had breakfast in his suite at the Waldorf-Astoria with Lawrence Richey, his former secretary. Shortly after 10 o'clock Ogden L. Mills, former Secretary of the Treasury, called. On leaving the hotel, Mr. Mills told reporters he had "just stopped in for a little visit" and that "we did not talk about politics," says an article in the New York Times which follows:

At noon, Mr. Hoover inspected "America's Little House," erected at Park Avenue and Thirty-ninth Street by the New York Committee of Better Homes in America. In the afternoon, he paid an informal visit to the New York Life Insurance Company offices, 51 Madison Avenue, where he was introduced to executive officers by Thomas A. Buckner, president of the company. Mr. Hoover recently was elected to the board of directors and is here to attend a meeting of the board tomorrow.

Though affable and smiling throughout the day, Mr. Hoover repeatedly declined to answer questions concerning politics put to him by reporters.

Model House "Too Perfect"

Mr. Hoover, who is honorary chairman of the Board of Directors of the Better Homes in America Inc., seemed to enjoy his inspection tour of the model house on Park Avenue. It was recalled that he became interested in the better homes movement when he was Secretary of Commerce, and that, cooperating with Mrs. William Brown Meloney, magazine editor of The New York Herald Tribune, in founding the organization, he served as its first president soon after the war.

On his arrival at the house, Mr. Hoover was met by Mrs. Meloney; Mrs. Robert G. Mead, vice chairman of the New York Committee, and the house architects, Roger H. Bullard and Clifford C. Wendehack. Mrs. Meloney began showing him all the time-saving devices in the building.

As the inspection tour started, the former President smiled and said, "I am looking for something imperfect, I wouldn't like to live in a house where everything was just right."

He appeared to be especially interested in the children's room, and when shown the pegs for clothing in the closet observed, "There is no excuse for little boys to throw their clothes on the floor when they have hooks like that, but they wouldn't be boys if they didn't."

Is Cheered by Employes

When Mr. Hoover arrived at the New York Life Insurance building, he found a large crowd of office employes grouped near the entrance awaiting his arrival. They cheered when he appeared and he raised his hat and smiled.

He was ushered into an elevator and taken to the directors' dining room, where luncheon was served. He remained until just before 3 o'clock, when he returned to his hotel to spend the rest of the day.

Mr. Richey told reporters Mr. Hoover had not prepared the speech which he is to deliver tonight at the Lincoln Day dinner of the National Republican Club. He said the former President "will probably just get up and make a few remarks."

Mr. Hoover will speak for ten or fifteen minutes in response to a greeting from Theodore Roosevelt, president of the club, it was announced. Governor Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey and Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin, will be the other principal speakers.

Mr. Richey also said Mr. Hoover probably would remain in New York until Thursday.

U.S. Stage Set For Revision Of War Policy

Curious Incongruity Links Move To Prevent Strife And Preparedness

The stage is being set for fundamental revision of the United States' policy in time of war. The second significant step: Introduction of bills involving the most intensive industrial mobilization, was taken recently.

The first step—which became known a month ago—turns on a redefinition of neutrality, says the Washington correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, whose article follows:

But the stage setting, to date, is of two entirely incongruous types. Motives head in two different directions, one toward the objective of keeping the United States out of war, and the other of putting the nation in a state of intense preparedness. At times, the two methods may coincide, in the theory that preparedness is a deterrent of war, but history has abundantly indicated that on many occasions mere military preparedness has acted as an incentive toward war.

Drafting of Wealth

The preparedness move, taken on both sides of the Capitol yesterday, was partly serious and partly strategic. In the House, under the sponsorship of John J. McSwain (D) South Carolina, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, the preparedness bills were taken at the request of the American Legion, and while intended to attain the objective of "drafting the wealth," were at the same time sponsored and approved by the most enthusiastic big-military advocates.

In the Senate, on the contrary, Senator Bennett Champ Clark (D), Missouri, introduced without personal indorsement a series of bills setting up machinery for mobilizing the nations' fullest resources in time of war, and had them referred to the Nye munitions committee, on which he sits. The inference was that the bills may have some connection with the drive to nationalize the munitions industry, a drive which has gained momentum in the Nye committee.

And the legislative action on both sides of Congress was connected with presistest Roosevelt's surprise move in December in authorizing Bernard M. Baruch and Brig. Gen. Hugh S. Johnson to prepare their industrial mobilization scheme.

Control of Finance

Senator Clark introduced no less than seven bills. They would empower the President to draft men and to take over all industrial enterprise in the event of an emergency as well as to control all material resources.

Further, the bills authorize the establishment of a new group of agencies to control wartime finance. They include a capital issues committee to pass on all security flotations, a marine war risk insurance bureau to insure commerce against the hazards of war, and a war finance corporation to finance private industries needed for fighting the war.

Such an overpowering legislative grant has not been paralleled since the days of the World War, and even then President Wilson's authority was considerably less than proposed in the pending bills. Legislative observers suspect that these bills were introduced partly with the motive of carrying preparedness to an extreme—perhaps to cause legislators to pause and turn back. In any event, such an amassment of dictatorial authority never flourished on American soil since the foundation of the republic.

Wide Power for President

The McSwain bills, introduced in behalf of the American Legion, follow somewhat similar lines. They are a modernized version of the Legion's 12-year fight to conscript capital as well as soldiers in time of war. Wartime powers to be vested in the President include:

To prohibit by decree any buying, selling, or contracting for any goods, things, or services, at a higher price than was in effect at the declaration of war.

To adjust upward or downward any price, rate, rent, commission, compensation, or reward in the sole discretion of the President.

To draft into service members of the organized militia between ages of 21 and 31.

To commandeer material resources, industrial organizations, and public services.

To license dealers and manufacturers in any industries the President sees fit.

Used During World War

These powers again seem in peacetime to be a great spread of authority. Actually, many of them were included in the functions of the War Industries Board as it came to exist toward the end of the late war.

But to enact such legislation in peacetime is a tall legislative order, and there is some question as to whether the bills will ultimately emerge from the congressional hopper.

At any event, American military policy is very much in the melting pot. Introduction of these mobilization measures might seem to foreign observers to be an indication of growing militarism in the United States, particularly when coupled with acts like the rejection of World Court membership. But they are not law yet, and the Administration has only given such tentative support as was indicated when President Roosevelt gave his instructions to Messrs. Baruch and Johnson in December.

Actually the strongest competition to such legislation will be given by bills for nationalization of the munitions industry, which have sponsors in both houses of Congress. But whether such measures stand a chance of passage is likewise open to doubt.

The Fire Plant

The seeds of the Black Wattle Tree, (whose Latin name is Acacia Mollissima, meaning the Softest Acacia, also Acacia Decurrens) are covered by an outer shell so hard that it requires the adoption of extreme measures before it will burst and permit the embryo to expand and start the young plant. Ordinary rain permeating the soil will be of no avail even after the seed had been imbeded for a number of years. Sometimes it is necessary to boil the seeds in hot water before they will crack or soften. But the most effectual natural means to effect their germination are bush fires, following which thousands of young plants will spring up in the ashes.

The Wattle is indigenous to Southern Australia and is highly valued for its bark which is rich in tannin, used by tanners.

Fingernail Of 33 Inches

Prior to the overthrow of the Manchu Dynasty and the establishment of the Chinese Republic, high caste Chinese considered manual labor to be a disgrace.

To avoid being ranked with the toiling classes the Chinese gentleman and lady cultivated their fingernails with a determination which appears incredible to a European. Ladies usually sported fingernails a foot long. But the subject of my cartoon, who was a nobleman of Soochow, seems to have established a record. When he was admitted to the Soochow Hospital for treatment in 1912, the length of the nail of his ring finger was measured and found to be 33 inches long. The nail of the little finger measured 15 inches. 44 years of the most careful cultivation were behind this achievement. The nails were sheathed in long bamboo thimbles, which were removed once a year when the nail was cleaned.

Kreisler's Secret Kept By Musicians

according to Wednesday's revelation, were actually the work of Mr. Kreisler.

Mr. Downes briefly told the story as narrated in yesterday's Times. The ruse had been used by Mr. Kreisler, he said, in part because of modesty and the desire not to have his name appear too often on programs—and in part because at the time Mr. Kreisler was not very well known and greater interest could be aroused in the selections by attributing them to familiar composers.

Efrem Zimbalist, Russian violinist and former Auer pupil, at his home at 227 East Forty-ninth Steet, expressed the opinion that Kreisler "did a great service" to music by writing the works which he for so long attributed to classic composers.

Zimbalist revealed, in fact, that during an intimate acquaintance of many years he had "always known" that Kreisler was the actual composer of these works, but had respected Kreisler's obvious wish not to play them as his own.

"Any one who is really familiar with Kreisler's style of writing," Mr. Zimbalist said, "would recognize the infallible signs of the actual composer of these works.

"The violin repertory has been wonderfully enriched by these compositions, and as Kreisler did not think it advisable to say they were his when he wrote them, he had a perfect right to attribute them to any one he pleased. Any composer, living or dead, should be proud to claim them as his own."

Elman Expresses Surprise

Micha Elman, who was first of the famous Auer clan to reach America years ago, was asked at his home at 262 Central Park West what he thought of the Viennese violinist's disclosure.

"It is indeed a surprise," Mr. Elman said, "that one who stands so high for all that is beautiful, pure and true in art as Kreisler should have resorted to such means in these so-called arrangements, which would take a high place of themselves, without his having to attribute his compositions to older sources, when these composers are unable to enjoy the plaudits or endure the criticisms which these compositions may or may not evoke."

At the home of Jascha Heifetz at 247 Park Avenue, it was said Mr. Heifetz had left for Florida and efforts were made to reach him en route, at Rock Hill, N. C., last evening for his opinion.

Albert Spalding, the American violinist, and Louis Persinger, teacher of Menuhin and others, both were engaged with classes at the Juilliard School. To inquiries there, they replied that they would rather not make any comment beyond the fact that they had believed the works for many years to be Kreisler's, but respected his wishes in not claiming actual authorship until now.

The list of works, known to violinists and audiences in every part of the world, as announced by Kreisler's publisher here yesterday through The New York Times, was as follows:

Concerto in C major, Vivaldi.
Allegretto in G minor, Porpora.
Andamtino, Padre Martini.
Aubade Provencale, Chanson Louis XIII and Pavane, Couperin.
La Chase, Cartier.
Menuet, Porpora.
Praeludium and Allegro, Pugnani
La Precieuse, Couperin.
Preghiera, Padre Martini.
Scherzo, Ditterdorf.
Sicilienne and Rigaudon, Francoeur.
Study on a Chorale, Stamitz.
Tempo di Minuetto, Pugnani.

According to a musician familiar with Yehudi Menuhin's public career since his prodigy days, Mr. Enesco, the Rumanian composer and violinist, urged Yehudi early in their acquaintance "to buy all the Kreisler works, regardless of the strange names connected with some of them."

Ship Men Push Navy In Brazil In Spite Of U.S.

Evidence Shows New York Firm Got An American Cruiser For Sample

American shipbuilders defied efforts of the State Department to prevent a naval race in South America, the Senate Munitions Investigating Committee disclosed recently, according to the Washington correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

Evidence brought before the committee showed that the New York Shipbuilding Corporation continued its endeavor to sell ships to Brazil in 1933 and 1934 after the company was told by State Department officials that there was no legal objection to such sales, but that this Government would view with regret any move to introduce naval rivalry in South America.

Hugh S. Gibson, Ambassador to Brazil, flatly refused to aid the shipbuilding company in getting the navy to send a cruiser sample to Rio at government expense, it was shown, but after continued appeals to Admiral William H. Standley, chief of naval operations, the cruiser Tuscaloosa visited the Brazilian capital in November, 1934. Mr. Gibson advised the State Department in a memorandum that he felt no cruiser should be sent "because of the effect its sudden appearance would have."

Scorns Shearer Implication

"Did it ever occur to you that the reason Ambassador Gibson would not help you sell ships was because your representatives, William B. Shearer, helped wreck his disarmament conference?" Senator Bennett C. Clark (D) of Missouri, asked C. L. Bardo, former president of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation.

Mr. Bardo laughed off the suggestion that Mr. Shearer, who was in the audience today, had power enough to upset the disarmament conference.

It was disclosed that the shipbuilding company ceased its effort to get Brazilian business last fall because Mr. Bardo said, of the decision that further solicitation was useless.

In a letter dated Sept. 28, however, he gave the investigations of the Nye Committee as the reason, telling an associate that in view of the committee's disclosures, two South American countries had already closed their doors to American munition makers and it was questionable whether the company was not wasting its time.

Denies Cost to Navy

Mr. Bardo denied that the Navy was spending "any extra money for our benefit," when it sent a sample cruiser to Rio de Janeiro during its "shakedown cruise." The Navy helped to prepare estimates on the Brazilian bids by furnishing information on costs of ship parts normally supplied by the Government, it was shown.

The committee learned today how Mr. Bardo had solicited aid from President Roosevelt through Gov. A. Harry Moore of New Jersey in preventing competition from a new company in the shipbuilding field. Mr. Bardo asked the Governor to write to James A. Farley, as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and to President Roosevelt protesting against the award of any Government loans to Gulf Industries, Inc., operated by L. R. Wilder, a former president of the New York company. Mr. Farley promised to give the matter his attention. The President's reply to Governor Moore read: "My Dear Governor: Thank you for your letter of July 7. I appreciate your writing about the matter, but we have no intention of acquiring shipyards."

Although Mr. Bardo recalled writing only one letter to Governor Moore on the subject, committee investigators, produced photostatic copies of five. He also appealed to Representative Mary T. Norton (D) of New Jersey, who replied that she had taken the matter up with government departments and was sure nothing would be done.

The Home Terrapin

On September 11, 1901, J. P. Johnson, a cattleman of Webster, Texas, carved a wine-glass brand and the date on a terrapin's back and released it. 33 years passed and Johnson never saw the terrapin again, but late in November, 1934, he found it while gathering wood, picked it up and found his carvings of a third of a century before. The terrapin hadn't changed much in size, but his hard shell gave evidence of having survived several prairie fires and many hard knocks in general through the years.

Bricklaying Champ

Back in 1925 James Brown, former Carlisle Indian school football player had a job on a construction gang laying paving brick near Kansas City, Mo. As the construction of the highway progressed Brown became more and more proficient at his task, and finally laved claim to a world championship by laying 36,000 bricks in a single working day. That's almost 3½ carloads of brick, and Brown kept five men supplying him with brick as he worked.

Considering the fact that he received only $16.00 a day, it was "cheap labor' for the company—who had more than 22 bricks laid for every cent paid to Brown.

Hoover Inducted To Insurance Post

Ex-President, in Genial Mood, Earns $50 For Attending 20-Minute Meeting

A genial and smiling Herbert Hoover was inducted into office as a director of the New York Life Insurance Company in February 13 earned $50 for twenty minutes' "work." Then he chatted with reporters, says a story in the New York Times.

"What have you enjoyed most on this trip?" the former President was asked.

"I don't know," he said smilingly. "I never put things in those categories." But then he added after a pause:

"I think probably I've enjoyed most just talking to people. You don't have to come to any decisions or any conclusions and you just talk—"

Mr. Hoover, the second former President to become a director of the company, was inducted at a monthly meeting of the directors in the board room at 51 Madison Avenue, where the late Calvin Coolidge became a member after he had left the White House. Mr. Hoover was nominated for the directorship a month ago by Alfred E. Smith, his rival for the Presidency in 1928.

Smith Sends Message

The long-awaited meeting between Mr. Hoover and former Governor Smith did not occur, as Mr. Smith was out of the city. He sent a telegram, however, to Thomas A. Buckner, president of the company, expressing regret at his inability to attend, and adding:

"Please see that I join with members of our board in greeting of welcome to our distinguished new member, Herbert Hoover."

Mr. Smith was detained in Florida, where he wife is recovering from an accident.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, another director, is abroad, but other members of the board were on hand to welcome Mr. Hoover.

After the regular order of business had been suspended at the beginning of the meeting Mr. Buckner rose and welcomed Mr. Hoover, declaring that he knew of "no man possessing a finer sense of trusteeship," and he praised Mr. Hoover's "broad grasp of the underlying principles of life insurance and his great humanitarian spirit."

Mr. Hoover responded briefly and the routine business of the meeting followed.

After the meeting, Mr. Hoover, with Mr. Buckner at his elbow, went into Mr. Buckner's office, where both posed amiably for photographers.

"Will you shake hands?" a photographer called after several "shots" had been made.

"Stunts" Are Ruled Out

"I don't think we want to do any handshaking," Mr. Buckner interposed. As another photographer urged them to "talk to each other" Mr. Hoover commented that "I don't think we want any stunts."

Surrounded by reporters after the picture-taking was over, Mr. Hoover shook his head in a firm negative when he was asked to talk abut national affairs and politics.

He said that he hoped to attend as many as possible of the monthly meetings of the directors and added that "there's a great deal of work to be done outside of New York City." Insurance trustees, he said, handle business of great public importance.

Mr. Hoover was asked whether he intended to be established to be nearer his "business," but he shook his head with a smile, and said emphatically:

"No, I came from the West and I'll stick to the West."

After the interview Mr. Hoover had lunch with Mr. Buckner and then returned to the Waldorf-Astoria, where he remained for the rest of the day receiving friends.

No More More Payments in Gold

For his attendance at the meeting Mr. Hoover received $50, and he will receive the same amount, plus his expenses from the Pacific Coast, for each subsequent meeting he attends. But he will not receive the gold coins that Mr. Coolidge received for his attendance at board meetings, for the fees have been paid in bills since the nation went off the gold standard. Mr. Hoover was not assigned to any committees yesterday, but he will be assigned shortly. He will received $20 for each committee meeting he attends.

Labor's Victory Gives Warning To British Cabinet

Young Churchill's Activity And Relief Cuts Bring Conservative Defeat

Labor's sensational victory in the Wavertree by-election—while a serious warning to the Government as to the political risks involved in the Indian reforms—is not, the Monitor understands, to be allowed to modify the MacDonald Cabinet's determination to push these great liberalizing changes into effect, says the London correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

Wavertree is a Conservative stronghold. Its capture by Labor has been mainly due to splitting of the Conservative vote owing to the intervention of Mr. Randolph Churchill—a young politician who shares his distinguished father's aversion to the Government's Indian policy.

A secondary cause of the Government candidate's reverse has been the unpopularity of the Government's recent cuts in unemployment relief scales. The Government has recently suspended these cuts, but the rioting at Sheffield has exemplified the tension still existing in this connection.

These facts qualify the significance of Labor's record poll of 15,611 votes at Wavertree as a signpost of this party's undoubtedly much improved prospects for the next general elections.

On the other hand the unexpectedly large vote of 10,575 secured by young Mr. Churchill has both depressed the Cabinet and heartened those Conservatives who disapprove of its policy toward India. Special significance attaches therefore to the Secretary of State for India's announcement during debate that the Government will "stand firmly" not only by the pledge for Indian constitutional advance given in 1919 but also for the undertaking added in 1929 that this means ultimate "attainment of dominion status." This "dominion status" is interpreted as implying complete independence for India in everything except the ability to secede.

The election showed the following results: J. J. Cleary, Laborite, 15,611; James Platt, Conservative, 13,771; Dandolph Churchill, "Independent" (Conservative), 10,575; T. Artis Morris, Liberal, 4000.

Anglo-American Accord Called Factor For Peace

Ramsay MacDonald, has great confidence in Anglo-American cooperation in all question affecting the peace of the world. This confidence rests largely upon what Sir John sees as the fundamental similarity between the British and American minds in the presence of problems of any kind, political, social, economic, juridical.

"The simple fact is," said Sir John, "that the Americans and ourselves dislike abstract commitments concerning concrete cases which have not arisen and can not be foreseen in all their details and bearings.

"We are not, in other words, logicians in the French signification. Our mental mold is empiric.

"We like to deal specifically with specific matters in the light of all the relevant circumstances. These two types of mind, however, are getting better and better acquainted with each other.

"International conferences, an earnest effort all round to promote world understanding and peace, are having their invaluable effect."

Patience, largeness of heart, good temper, a resolute will to get at all the facts, and then to act justly in relation to the facts—these words express Sir John's philosophy of the essentials of peaceful and progressive diplomacy. He realizes—no man more vividly—that statesmen have a long way to go before they can say to themselves, "The world is stabilized; peace is secure."

"But Westward, Look"

But he thinks he perceives the slow assembling of overpowering forces to support that advance. We have seen something of his dimensions in law and in politics.

He also is a scholar (was among the last men to quote Greek in the House of Commons) and a linguist (speaks half a dozen languages) and is steeped in English prose and poetry.

"There is a verse of Clough, you know," said Sir John, smiling, "which might interest your fellow-countrymen."

And he declaimed:

And not from Eastern windows only
When daylight comes, comes in the light—
In front the sun mounts slow, how slowly,
But Westward, look, the land is bright!

"Perhaps," concluded the Foreign Secretary, musingly, "that refers to the United States."

Columbia Alumni Hear Peace Pleas

Closer World Ties Urged By Foreign Correspondents At Annual Celebration

Columbia University alumni, returning recently to the Morning-side Heights campus for the annual Alumni Day exercises, heard New York correspondents of four foreign newspapers urge closer international cooperation as an essential factor in maintaining world peace, says a story in the New York Times.

The newspaper men, who spoke at a luncheon in John Jay Hall, were R. J. Cruikshank of The News-Chronicle, London; Pierre Denoyer of the Petit Parisien, Paris; Chojiro Kuriyama of the Mainichi, Osaka, Japan, and Vladimir Romm of the Izvestia, Moscow.

Mr. Cruikshank declared that the people of Great Britain were "intensely interested" in the progress of events in this country under President Roosevelt and that "we are possibly more optimistic about your future than you are yourselves."

Foresees Closer Ties

"I will make only one prophecy on the subject of Anglo-American relations," he said. "It is that during the coming year there will be an interweaving of British and American ideas, not in the region of international affairs so much as in the internal philosophies of both countries."

Declaring that a formal political alliance between the two countries "is out of the question because we respect your desire for detachment," Mr. Cruikshank said that "it is not out of treaties and pacts but out of the natural goodness in the hearts of ordinary men that the new world of your heart's desire will be built."

Mr. Kuriyama, referring to the recent clash in views on naval parity, declared that no satisfactory accord would be reached between the United States and Japan until political problems and naval programs could be regarded as "mutualy interdependent."

He asserted that Japan has been accused falsely of violating the "open door" in China.

"Japan does not fear competition, since she is closer to the China market than her competitors and her labor costs are less," he said. "The wider the "door' is open, the better the market for Japan. She would gain much through mutual cooperation in the matter of commercial opportunity and equal treatment in China.

"What is implied in the United States' insistence on naval superiority over Japan is, according to my understanding, the desire on the part of the United States to reserve her so-called potential market in the Far East. To state it bluntly, the raison d'etre of a superior navy of the United States is only to give sanction to the opendoor policy in the Far East."

Urges Reaffirmation of Policy

Mr. Kuriyama added that "the task which demands our consideration in the immediate future is an international conference to reaffirm the open-door policy and reestablish the equality of psychological security in the China market."

M. Denover said the continuation of peaceful international relationships and the normal, gradual improvement of the economic situation were the two main objects of the French nation.

"The consolidation of peace in Europe is an essential factor to restore confidence, to encourage foreign transactions, and to help a resumption in price levels" he declared. "France wants to live in peace and the French Government has been continuously engaged in the task of completing a net of pacts of mutual assistance, of building up a wall of pledges against an outbreak of war anywhere in Europe."

He added that one of the greatest fears in France was that there might be another fall in the value of the pound and of the dollar. He held it was "almost impossible" for France to go off the gold standard.

M. Romm declared that the peace of the world would be greatly strengthened by stronger relations between Russia and the United States.

"You undoubtedly know that the United States is one of the countries in which our people have the keenest interest and that American technique and methods of organization and production enjoy a very high reputation," he said. "It is to be hoped that artificial obstacles and difficulties in the way of the expansion of our economic relations will give way before what will be only a natural development."

Correspondents Are Praised

Dean Carl W. Ackerman of the School of Journalism acted as "official representative" of Dr. Nicholis Murray Butler, who sailed for Europe a few days ago. The dean welcomed the correspondents and praised the work they were doing to strengthen international relations.

Medals to fifteen graduates for conspicuous alumni service were presented by Edmund A. Prentis Jr., newly elected president of the Alumni Federation, who presided at the luncheon. Messages from Columbia Clubs all over the world and a radio message from Dr. Butler, sent from mid-ocean, were read by Mr. Prentis.

At the annual business meeting of the federation, officers named in addition to Mr. Prentis were H. Starr Giddings, first vice president; Everett W. Gould, second vice president; Darwin S. Hudson, third vice president; William H. Woglom, treasurer, and S. Grant Stone, recording secretary.

During the afternoon hundreds of alumni visited the buildings on the campus, watched several varsity teams in practice, attended a mock trial at the law school and saw a swimming meet between Columbia and Princeton.

Roosevelt Has Failed To Keep Word, Is Charge

Caustic Report Is Prepared By Committee Of Methodist Federation

Roosevelt performance has failed to live up to Roosevelt promise, according to a caustic report prepared by Dr. Harry F. Ward and Miss Winifred L. Chappell, of the Methodist Federation for Social Service. The report is, in fact, an indictment—the second they have drawn up, according to an article in a recent issue of the Literary Digest.

The first, issued in December, accused the President of betraying the "forgotten man," and found fault with him for retaining the profit system. "Business men," said the December indictment, "use suasion and threats against his (the President's) big spending program. He talks now of turning the job back to the business men.

"The same mixture is in the minds of Mussolini and Hitler. Even they are sincere in wanting the good of their people, but, because they don't know what is wrong with the system, they don't know how to get what they want."

Severe Impeachment

The second impeachment is equally as severe. The New Deal, according to these critics, has served only to help those at the top, and to push down those clinging precariously to the bottom rung of the ladder up which the people were to climb.

Doctor Ward, a Left-Winger, believes that his church has slipped steadily in the same direction during the last decade. Other and earlier surveys on a variety of topics would seem to bear him out that radicalism is seeping into the Methodist ministerial and other Protestant ranks.

Born in London, Doctor Ward came to America in his youth. He studied at the University of Southern California, Northwestern, and Harvard. In 1899 he was ordained to the Methodist Episcopal Ministry, and served, until 1912, in churches in Chicago and Oak Park, Illinois.

He was professor of social service at Boston University's School of Theology until 1918, when he joined the faculty of Union Theological Seminary, New York. He has written many books and articles on religious and sociological subjects, mostly of a liberal trend. Miss Chappell, too, is stamped with a similar liberal hue.

Comparing promises made in the President's "radio fireside chats," and in other addresses "with to-day's actual conditions," the report said that "the President has failed most utterly to realize his promises."

Here are some of the findings:

"The standard of living and culture for the overwhelming majority of the population is pushed steadily downward.

"Money Changers Back"

"Public works, the CCC, the blanket agreement, the code provisions, were relied on to get man back into industry, or into new construction; for the rest there were relief, work relief, made-work by means of the CWA, mattress factories, subsistence homesteads. All of these failed or were too slow.

"The codes tended to fix minimum wages around $12, but the minimum often became the maximum.

"The purchasing power of the average man has steadily decreased. . . . The net result, thus far, has been entirely top-heavy for the special privileged class.

"The money-changers are back. Roosevelt has continued the Hoover policy of seeking to save the debt structure by putting government credit behind the failing credit of big corporations. This has intensified the disease of our failing economic order—the piling up of a load of debt. The bankers have the money—billions lie idle in their banks. And they can and do call the tune.

"Meantime, concentration of ownership and income becomes increasingly greater at the top, and the standard of living for the overwhelming majority of the population is pushed steadily downward."

The report was mailed to members of the Federation, chiefly ministers of the Methodist Church, and to ministers of other denominations, and to church members interested in social service.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Chief Palooka

Until 1884, when Kitchener reorganized the inefficient native army of the Egyptian Viceroys, foreign mercenaries constituted the backbone of the armed forces of the country. The Egyptian rulers relied upon Turks, Greeks and Sudanese to defend them, but the highest paid body of mercenaries were the Albanians, whom the Egyptian rulers considered the Bravest of the Brave. Under the reign of the Egyptian Viceroy Taufik in 1888, this crack Albanian force was commanded by General Antonio Palooka, who was a native of Tirana, and in spite of his name, a highly adventurous soldier of fortune. He was a man of tremendous muscular strength, frank, handsome and a brilliant warrior, greatly feared by the Turks and the Fuzzy-Wuzzies.

Social and Personal Notes

TOKYO WOMEN'S CLUB

Officers for the new year were elected, annual reports were read, and a demonstration of the tea ceremony set to music, was given at the annual meeting of the Tokyo Women's club Monday afternoon at the Y.W.C.A.

Mrs. W. J. Davies of the British Embassy was elected president for 1935-1936. Other officers elected are Mrs. Fred Rogers, vice president Mrs. C. P. Garman, treasurer; Mr. R. B. de Mallie, assistant treasurer; Mrs. H. A. Mecrae, corresponding secretary; Miss Y. Jo, assistant corresponding secretary; Mrs. John P. Hubbard, recording secretary; Mrs. Charles Iglehart, chairman of the music committee; Mrs. T. T. Brumbaugh, chairman of the art committee; Mrs. J. A. Rabbitt, chairman of the civics committee; and Mrs. Arthur Jorgenson, custodian.

While activities of the year were summed in reports by the officers and committee chairmen, members of the club were seated at long tables forming an open square and tea was served.

Mrs. Russell Durgin, chairman of the art committee, and Mrs. Gilbert Bowles had arranged for the tea ceremony set to music and Mrs. Bowles introduced the man who had originated this innovation.

He is Mr. S. Nienuma who has been teaching the tea ceremony for 50 years. Although he is 74 years old, Mr. Nienuma recently announced his ambition in life—to make the tea ceremony universal. He contends that though Japan has fine cultures and traditions, she makes the mistake of trying to keep them to herself.

As a step toward the realization of his ambition, he has set the tea ceremony to music—thus far to Oriental music. His next step will be to set it to Occidental music.

Mr. Nienuma was merely a spectator at the ceremony Monday while the demonstration was given by his adult pupils. His daughter acted as the hostess and another young lady was the guest. The music was flute, samisen, and vocal solo, the young woman who played the samisen also singing.

Miss Nienuma, in serving the tea, adjusted her actions to the music gracefully and effectively. She moved with short, almost hesitant dance steps and her movements were artistic posture studies. At times her approach to the bowls and her handling of them suggested the quiet, studied Japanese dance in which the parasol is used. The charm and the grace of the ceremony was heightened by the ease of Miss Nienuma's manner and her pleasant expression. Hostess and guest as well as the musicians were dressed, appropriately, in ceremonial kimono.

In her annual report, Miss Lila Halsey, chairman of the civics committee, announced that Judge Suzuki of the Juvenile Court had given ¥150 to the club following his address on January 21 and that he had also given a copy of his book on juvenile court work, to the club library.

Mrs. T. D. Walser, librarian, announced that two books, "The Journal" by Katherine Mansfield, were missing from the library. Others making reports were committee chairmen, Mrs. James Course, recording secretary; Mrs. Steinfeld, treasurer; Mrs. G. S. Phelps, custodian; Mrs. Russell Durgin, art; Mrs. Bradford Smith, drama; Mrs. Herbert Bowles, literature; Mrs. Netke-Loewe, music; Mrs. W. J. Davies, extension committee; and Mrs. Burton Crane, publicity.

Mrs. Edward Gauntlett will speak on "Women's Suffrage Work in Japan at the Club meeting at 3:30 p.m. next Monday at the Y.M.C.A.

$70,000,000,000 Value Put On World Diamonds

On women's necks and fingers, in the treasure stores of Indian princes; and in bank vaults and family safes, there are today more than fifty tons of cut diamonds.

This immense quantity of precious stones owned by the public throughout the world, weighs approximately 250,000,000 carats, and is valued at nearly $70,000,000,000, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

"These figures may sound enormous," Johan J. Smit, Amsterdam diamond dealer, said, "but they are not out of proportion. The industry employs more than 500,000 men in the mining districts; 25,000 cutters throughout the world; 10,000 dealers in unset stones, and probably another 100,000 in jewelers' shops."

"And people are buying diamonds again," continued Smit. "Although the market for big stones is still somewhat limited, since the depression, the sale of small diamonds is increasing. For one thing, they are cheap now, and form a good investment."

Another boon to the diamond trade is its increasing use by industry. Electrical works, automobile factories, and various other industrial concerns employ diamonds for grinding and drilling. For these purposes the best type of stone is required.

Norwegians Sign Arbitration Pact With Netherlands

Oslo Reports Fifteenth Treaty Applying To All Disputes

The fifteenth "all-in-abitration" treaty of Norway is now in force, as the result of its ratification by the Netherlands, says a dispatch to the Christian Science Monitor from Oslo.

The new treaty of judicial settlement, arbitration and conciliation is good for 10 years. It provides that all disputes—of whatever nature—that may arise between Norway and the Netherlands must be settled by pacific means.

To assist the two governments, all disputes which have not been solved through the usual diplomatic channels may in the first instance be referred to a permanent conciliation commission of five members.

Conciliation Commission

An Englishman, Lord Macmillan, is the president of this commission. The other four members are Mr. Paul E. Vogt, for over 20 years Norwegian Minister to the Court of St. James's, Mr. J. C. A. Everwijn, former Netherlands Minister in Washington, and two neutrals—M. Alphonse Dunant, the Swiss Minister in Paris and Prof. Amedeo Giannini, of Italy.

The treaty is based on the model bilateral conventions recommended by the Assembly of the League of Nations in 1928. All disputes about which the two governments differ as to their respective "rights" must be referred to the World Court or to an arbitral tribunal.

Typical of this class of difficulties are those enumerated in Article 13 of the League Covenant—"disputes as to the interpretation of a treaty, any question of international law, as to the existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of any international obligation, or as to the extent and nature of the reparation to be made for any such breach."

Methods of Solution

Before proceeding before the World Court or the arbitral tribunal, the two governments may agree to refer the disputes to the conciliation commission. If either party cannot agree before which tribunal to submit the matter, one of them may, after a month's notice, bring it before the World Court.

Any other dispute goes to the conciliation commission, which must propose a solution, and, in any case, present a report. Here, too, in the absence of agreement as to what should be referred to the commission, either party may, after a month's notice, submit its own case to it.

The commission is appointed for three years, and the commissioners may be reappoined. Their decisions are by majority vote. They may be assisted by experts, and are empowered to hear any person whose testimony may be useful.

Similar "all-in arbitration" treaties have been signed by Norway with the United States, Denmark, Finland, Sweden, Switzerland, Spain, Italy, Poland, Turkey, Portugal, Iceland (Bulgaria, Luxemburg and Czechoslovakia.

$48,800 Insurance Placed On Stamp

Lloyds Issues Policy On 1-Cent British Guiana Token Owned By Mrs. Arthur Hind

"The rarest stamp in the world," the whereabouts of which has not been public knowledge for months, was insured recently, by Lloyds for £10,000 ($48,800 at the current exchange), says a London dispatch to the New York Times.

The valuable scrap of colored paper, an early British Guiana issue of one-cent denomination, is the property of Mrs. Arthur Hind, widow of a well-known philatelist and millionaire plush manufacturer of Utica, N. Y. The elusive gem of the Hind collection is on its way to London to be sold at auction in the Strand establishment of Harmer, Brookes & Co.

The stamp was at one time in the famous Ferrari collection. It was last sold in Paris about eight years ago for £7,400. Since then it has been reported in Austria and other places in Europe. When Mr. Hind died it was decided that the stamp did not form part of his estate, but was the personal property of Mrs. Hind.

The Hind collection being sold in London has already brought in more than £150,000. A cable message was received by Harmer, Brookes & Co. stating that Gordon Harmer of the firm had interviewed Mrs. Hind at Utica and that she had agreed to sell the valuable British Guiana stamp at auction, probably in March.

The Stamp Is Unique

"The rarest stamp in the world," a magenta-colored one-cent stamp issued in British Guiana in 1856, has long been considered the most valuable item in a collection of the late Arthur Hind, which was valued at from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000.

The British Guiana stamp, the only one of its kind known in the world, was presented by Mr. Hind to his wife shortly before his death in March, 1933. Mrs. Hind did not place the stamp on sale when an auction of her husband's collection was announced by his estate shortly after his death.

The Hind collection was divided for auction into two lots, one of American issues for sale in this country in the Fall of 1933, and a collection of foreign stamps, placed on sale in London last yer.

Group Brought $245,000

The collection of American issues was sold in a five-day auction at the Waldorf-Astoria for a total of $245,000. Mr. Hind was said to have declined an offer of $450,000 for the collection before his death.

The collection of foreign issues was valued at more than $1,000,000 and is still being sold at auction in London.

At the time Mr. Hind purchased the British Guiana stamp in Paris, he was reported to have outbid King George V for the stamp. Mr. Hind denied later that he had bought the stamp in a bidding contest with King George, but he said he had outbid the King in the purchase of a twenty-shilling Niger coast stamp of minor importance.

Balkan Entente Moves To Level Trade Barriers

Diplomatic And Political Grouping Expected To Be Also Economic

Can the Balkan Entente—that political grouping of Greece, Turkey, Roumania and Yugoslavia—also become an economic entente?

A solution to this problem has been attempted by the Entente's Economic Council, whose first session was held here in January, according to an article on the Christian Science Monitor.

Although the four states of the Balkan Entente are closely allied politically, their trade with one another is negligible. Yet their combined population is 55,000,000, and their territories total nearly 1,500,000 square kilometers.

The Economic Council was set up at Ankara at the last conference of the Entente. Its principal task is to work for the "progressive co-ordination" of the economic interests of the four governments.

To Improve Trade

The meeting here of the trade experts of the four countries is the first official effort to bring about an economic rapprochement between the Entente States. At present trade between the four members is at a low level. The problem is how to raise it.

The experts have four months in which to prepare a plan. On May 10, at Bucharest, they are expected to present their proposals to the Permanent Council of the Entente. Before the Bucharest meeting, however, they hope to meet in Ankara—probably on April 1—to put the finishing touches to their scheme.

Their meeting here have been held in strict privacy, and little is known of their plans. It is understood, however, that the setting up of a preferential tariff between the four Entente members is under consideration. This would specially favor their own products. With this might be combined some form of protection for these products in relation to extra-Balkan markets.

The main difficulty in the way of an economic entente is that the four countries produce the same things. This makes their exchange difficult. Inter-Balkan trade amounts to hardly 9 per cent of total Balkan exports. Then there is a wide discrepancy between the inter-Balkan exports of the four countries. Thus, Yugoslavia at the top sends nearly 22 per cent of all its exports to the other Balkan states. Greece, at the other end of the exporting scale, sells only 1.9 per cent of its produce to the Balkan.

Wheat From Others

The four countries are mainly agricultural. Their agricultural and timber exports form about 70 to 80 per cent of their total exports. Yet Greece, for instaance, imports annually 400,000 to 600,000 tons of millable wheat from outside the Balkans—instead of from its neighbors.

These economic factors are said by some experts to make an economic entente illusory. It would not, they say, produce worth while economic advantages. Others consider the agricultural similarity of the four states and their lack of industrialization as distinct advantages. For, they add, this very similarity prevents the usual struggle between agricultural and industrial classes experienced by other countries. Moreover, an economic understanding will add to their bargaining powers with the outside world.

Other questions are also being studied by the economists of the four Entente states. They include the development of inter-Balkan land, air and water communications, the possibility of setting up a Balkan bank abroad and the development of tourism in general.

40 Times President

Samuel Gompers (1850-1924), founder of the American Federation of Labor, was a native of England when he emigrated to the United States at the age of 13.

When the American Federation of Labor was organized in 1881, Gompers was elected Vice-President. A year later he was elected President and has been re-elected to this office 39 times between 1883 and 1924. Only once did Gompers fail of election. That was in 1895 when he was defeated by John McBride.

Iniquitous Inepegut

Many years ago out on the White Rocks Indian Agency, Uintah County, Utah, there lived a lonely hermit Indian named Inepegut who never wore clothes or lived in shelter, winter or summer, though the weather varied from blistering heat to sub-zero blizzards year in and year out.

Historians, old timers, and the Indian tribes of Utah record that Inepegut inflicted this punishment upon himself as a penance for killing his mother while he was drunk. Realizing his crime at once, he followed the Old Indian custom of leaving the tribe to go to the "Happy Hunting Ground," and for more than 30 years he wore no clothes, slept on the ground and snow-covered ice, ate only what little food was left by those who pitied him. At times his beard and hair would become frozen in the ice, and had to be chopped loose. But he never broke his Indian vow to die the miserable death of a criminal.

Danish Author To Travel 25,000 Mi. By Dogsled

Plans for what he claims will be the longest dog-sledge trip in the world, 25,000 miles over a period of five years, was announced recently in Aslo, says the New York Times.

The route of the proposed trip, to be made with a ten-dog sledge, would take Mr. Drastrup along the east coast of Greenland and northward to Thule, thence to Eskimoland, Eastern Canada and Alaska to Nome, over the Bering Strait and along North Siberia in the direction of Norway.

Traveling would be limited to the Winter months for the most part. Mr. Drastrup says he made an 800-mile dog-sledge trip last winter in East Greenland as training for his trip around the Polar Sea. He is finishing a book on the Greenland dog and his experiences with the dog sledge expedition.

Gen. Butler Seeks Eagle As Helper At Lectures

The trouble is that it is hard to recognize a bald eagle as such until he is fully grown, Clyde Hill of the Denver zoo has informed General Smedley Butler, who wants a bird of that particular variety.

If General Butler has asked for a golden eagle it would have been a simple order to fill. And the zoo has an old, slightly tattered bald one. But General Butler will have nothing but a bald, young bird, according to The New York Times.

As he explained to Mr. Hill in a letter, he wants to train a bald eagle to appear on lecture platforms with him. Old ones are too fierce and will not be subdued.

The "bald" eagle is bald on the legs and his head feathers turn white when he is about two years old.

League Evaded Issues Raised By Ethiopians

Geneva Much Embarrassed By Protest On Italy's 'Aggressions'

The Italian-Ethiopian border incidents have already proved embarrassing to the League of Nations, according to the Geneva correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

When Ethiopia formally protested at Geneva against Italian "aggression," followed by serious counter-charges on the part of the Rome Government, the situation became more complicated and acute. Italy not only made counter-charges, demanding reparation, but clearly intimated that it did not intend to be brought before the bar of the League at the bidding of Ethiopia. There were whispers of the Italian delegates resolve to walk out of the Council if the matter were discussed in public.

Regrettable as it appears, that the great powers should refuse to submit to treatment which they are ready to impose on smaller nations, it is, in the present stage of international development, natural enough that Italy should have felt its dignity hurt at Ethiopia's attempt to bring it, as it were, up for trial.

It may be that there is a tendency resort too lightly to the League Council. Perhaps there should be a preliminary sifting of complaints in private. Otherwise any nation is liable to be accused and put on the defensive before the Council at any time.

Big nations are not necessarily in the wrong, and they should not be the sport of little nations in the League.

League Not a Pillory

In fact, there was actually a sort of preliminary sifting. The great powers brought pressure on Abyssinia to enter into private negotiations with Italy. Those who like international dirty linen to be washed in public were disappointed, and were given the opportunity of declaring that at Geneva there is one law for the big and another for the little state. But the more judicious view is that recourse to the League should come after, not before, diplomatic conversations. The League is not meant to be a pillory into which any nation can put any other nation at any time, with or without cause.

Unfortunately, long before Pierre Laval, French Foreign Minister, went to Rome, it was widely reported that one of the conditions of Franco-Italian accord would be "a free hand for Italy in Abyssinia." This report appeared in nearly every newspaper. It was perhaps an indiscretion, but it was not an invention. The future of the last of the old independent countries of Africa was doubtful.

Have Equal Rights

Ethiopia is a member of the League of Nations, and as such must enjoy equal rights, and should be regarded as on an equivalent plane of civilization with France and Italy.

It is protested that Ethiopia ought not to have been admitted to the League. It is one of the last strongholds of the slave traffic, and as such is outside the pale of civilization as civilization is understood today. This reproach is, however, belated.

The Corriere della Sera expresses the Italian view when it writes: "Even if we admit that the Abyssinian (Ethiopian) authorities were in ignorance of incidents which appear like provocations, one must ask how a country whose government cannot maintain discipline among its own soldiers can be put on the same footing as civilized nations. The presence of Abyssinia in the League is altogether strange."

The Italians lay stress on the moral implications of the entry of Ethiopia into the League—namely the promise to abolish slavery. Yet it has been shown, time after time, that slavery has not been abolished, that it asserts itself as an ineradicable custom. There is thus a great golf between Ethiopia and other members of the League.

Friendly Gestures

It should be pointed out, however, that Italy has sought the friendship of Ethiopia. In 1925 the Ras Taffari, now the Emperor, visited Rome in pomp, and his visit was returned by princes of the Italian royal house. A treaty of friendship and of arbitration was signed by the two countries.

A few months ago the governments exchanged declarations in which they affirmed their intention of doing nothing to impair their good relations. The rumors of Italian "expansion," at the expense of Ethiopia, were already afloat.

The question which is being asked in international circles is, therefore, whether the current difficulties should be regarded as passing incidents, without importance, without consequence; or whether they are the opening notes of an immense African drama.

It is difficult to pronounce. But up to this time it was felt that the appointment of Gen. Emilio de Bono as High Commissioner for the Italian Colonies of Eastern Africa was accompanied by assurances of peace, and that he is charged with the settlement of outstanding questions between Eritrea and Somaliland on the one hand and Ethiopia on the other.

Septet Born In Germany In 1600, Lived 11 Days

The famed Dionne quintuplets of Callander, Ont., were outdone in numbers by a septet, born in Homelin, Germany 335 years ago, according to the New York Times.

The seven infants lived only eleven days, however, according to a stone tablet, restored in 1818, on the house where the multiple birth occurred. It records that event as follows:

"In this town, to one Thiele Roemer, and to his wife, Anna Beyers, there were born 9th January, A. D. 1600, at 3 a.m., two male and five female children at one birth. All died on the 20th day of the same month at 12 o'clock, having received holy baptism. God grant them bliss everlasting."

Hungarian Peasants' Art Displayed At Exhibition

An exhibition of works of art which have, so to speak, been produced "by the light of nature," was recently held in Budapest.

Imre Oravec, the cowboy; Peter Barabas, the farmers; Peter Markovics, the shepherd, have contributed to it, together with half a score of others including Mary—the maid-of-all-work, who has lived so long in the service of one family that both they and she have forgotten whether she ever had a second name.

The work of the untaught Hungarian peasants has never before collected and placed on exhibition according to the Christian Science Monitor. In the past, it has been carried out merely as a hobby—because, as one of the nature artists explained, they had "loved pencils more than sugar" when they were children, and had used them ever since "just because they must."

And designs were carried out in embroidery on finely woven linen, and scenes were painted upon walls and furniture, and models were carved out of odd pieces of wood collected from the fields, and verses were made—or made themselves—to be sung to popular tunes. Nobody suggested for a moment that tuition in such matters might be of advantage.

It was not until Mr. Mikos Lazar, a member of the Hungarian Parliament, with his friend, Mr. Jeno Balint, first came to suspect that works of art of an unusual character were hidden in out-of-the-way corners of their country and set themselves to collect and then to exhibit them, that Hungary came to realize the full value of its own natural gifts.

Hull Attacks Tariff Enemies On Own Stand

Says Objectors To Cut In Manganese Duty Block All World Trade

Tackling the tariff lobbies on the weak ground which they themselves chose, Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, recently opened the Administration's fight against the interests which would block reopening of world trade channels through the reciprocal tariff program.

It has been plain for some weeks that the program was in serious jeopardy, as familiar faces were seen again on Capitol Hill, the individual industries began to put pressure on their congressmen in the old cumulative and irresistible fashion, according to the Washington correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, whose article follows:

Secretary Hull, who knows the workings of lobbies from a lifetime of experience in House and Senate, realized that an aggressive counter-attack is the best defense of his program. He knows that similar forces to those which defeated the World Court, and the powerful coalitions which, for nearly half a century, have put successively increasing tariff bills through Congress, can wreak havoc with his program.

Lays Down Barrage of Fact

Hence, in delight that the tariff-lobby chooses to make an issue of the manganese question, Secretary Hull leaps to the fray in the vigorous mood of the Tennessee mountaineer—a role which he often prides himself on.

Manganese is the key concession in the recent reciprocal treaty with Brazil. The United States proposes to halve its duty on this product, essential to forging of steel, in return for a long list of Brazilian concessions on American exports of automobiles, machinery and other typical products. The present manganese duty amounts to 100 per cent.

What does this duty protect, asks Secretary Hull? Some 350 miners. Less than were employed in the industry before the first manganese duty ever went into effect. Who pays? Everyone who consumes steel. Who would benefit by a reduction of the duty? The steel industry first employing several hundred thousand workers, and indirectly, the exporters of automobiles, machinery, etc., who will have easier entry into Brazil.

Drives Figures Home

Secretary Hull gives some pointed history:

"Before 1922 there was no duty on manganese ore and, except for the highly stimulated period of our participation in the World War, production had been only about 2 per cent of domestic demands.

"In 1922 manganese producers told Congress that if a duty of 1 per cent per pound was imposed on imports they would soon produce 50 to 75 per cent of domestic needs.

"They got the duty they asked for."

"Instead of making good their promise, domestic production for the six years, 1923 to 1928, inclusive, averaged only 8.3 per cent of domestic consumption. Despite this showing, managanese producers came to Congress in 1929 and asked still greater duties on imports, making the same promises as they had made seven years previously.

"They got the increase. The 1 cent per pound duty was made applicable to ores containing 10 per cent or more manganese content, instead of to those only of 30 per cent or more.

"With this increased duty, domestic managanese production declined instead of increasing. In 1931, 46,616 tons were produced; in 1932, 20,079, and in 1933, 20,133 (estimated)."

The Secretary opened his onslaught by saying:

"I feel that some notice should be taken of the grossly exaggerated and misleading propaganda which is being circulated by the combined lobies seeking to kill all efforts to restore normal world trade—a trade upon which the employment of millions in this country and of tens of millions in the world is dependent.

"The propaganda would make it seem that the proposed reduction of the duty on manganese ore from 110 per cent for 1933 to 55 per cent will throw many thousands of American wage-earners out of employment and wreck a great nation-wide industry. This combined propaganda is the rebirth of the old log-rolling system which gave us the Smoot-Hawley misery of the past few years.

"I dare say that even McKinley or Dingley, if alive in 1932, would not have fixed the rate as high as 55 per cent in the first place. The fog of propaganda cannot obscure the truth."

And this, according to Secretary Hull, is that only a few hundred Americans out of 45,000,000 Americans gainfully employed are engaged in mining manganese, with American production less than 10 per cent of needs, declining for a number of years.

He continues:

"The main purpose of proposing a reduction of the rate on manganese ore, as in the case of any similar rate reduction, is to induce other countries in turn to lower their rates or other obstructions against the exportation and sale of those commodities which we export. There is no other possible way for the accomplishment of this practical and mutually profitable result.

"The American public therefore has the choice either to continue to close its eyes and rush headlong further in the direction of shutting out every possible opportunity to sell our goods and to restore full prosperity, or it can instead pursue a broad and practical program for the normal restoration of mutually profitable trade between nations."

Climbed Pike's Peak on Hands and Knees

Crawling nine miles on hands and knees is a mighty difficult way to get to the top of a mountain to see a sunrise, but Raymond Phelps, young Rush, Colorado rancher did just that. It wasn't a wager, nor was it just a stunt. Phelps, whose legs are crippled from the hips down, merely wanted to scale Pike's Peak.

Starting in late afternoon, August 9, 1934, with padded gloves and knee protectors, Phelps laboriously climbed the Peak via the famous Cog Wheel Route, arriving on top shortly after 7 o'clock the next morning in time for the beautiful view of sunrise over the plains of eastern Colorado.

Britain's Defense Policy Supported

Laborite Motion Of Censure Is Defeated 424 To 79; Baldwin Speaks

Nippon Dempo-United Press

LONDON, March 11—The House of Commons tonight expressed confidence in the government's defense policy, rejecting a Laborite motion of censure by a vote of 424 to 70.

The increased army estimates of 10,500,000 pounds and envisaged increased air and other difference were referred to in the Labor censure motion as a "policy of repudiation of the League of Nations."

Is Not Expansion

In the debate on the defense estimates, Mr. Stanley Baldwin insisted that the British naval policy under the naval treaties has been replacement and not expansion. He asserted Japan's modern tonnage greatly exceed Britain's and he also cited the jump in the American naval appropriations from $350,000,000 in 1933 to $580,000,000 in 1935.

Mr. Baldwin said Britain has allowed numerous cruisers, destroyers and aircraft carriers to become overage, hoping as the greatest naval power to set an example which would have a steadying influence on foreign programs, "but it had not had that influence."

Replacement Urgent

Referring to Japan's increase in naval personnel, he said, "Japan probably will have a completely underage fleet in 1936, and if the Washington treaty is not renewed replacement of Britain's battleships will "rapidly become urgent."

11,000 Different Speeds Attained In Gear Box

Gear shifts that give 11,000 different speeds on one apparatus were ready to go to work on Feb. 15 at the hydraulic laboratory of the "Automatic control equipment," Professor Daugherty said, "gives the speed and accuracy. We have designed all the instruments ourourselves in order that all tests will be with primary measurements."

The laboratory was established to make research tests to provide the most efficient specifications for pumping equipment to be used on the 240-mile aqueduct from the Colorado River to Southern California in the $220,000,000 metropolitan water district project, says the New York Times.

Time, work and speed are the three chief elements to be answered. It is this speed measurement device, the electric dynamometer, that has the gear-box control providing speeds all the way from one-half to 5,500 revolutions a minute.

Increase In Arms Of U.S.S.R. Told Soviet Congress

2,000 Delegates Hear Molotoff Speak On Developments In Military Equipment

Reference to Russia's increased armaments "for the country's defence" was made by M. Molotoff, the Soviet Premier on Jan. 28, when he made his official report on Soviet affairs to 2,000 delegates to the All-Union Congress of Soviets in the Kremlin's former Throne Room.

Among those present were the present British Ambassador, Viscount Chilston, and his wife and M. Litvinoff, the Soviet Foreign Minister, according to an account in the London Daily Telegraph.

"We have built not a few fortresses on the east and west," he said, "but such fortresses cannot be moved across our frontiers into foreign territory. We have increased the artillery and technical equipment of our Red Army. Its mechanical equipment has increased fourfold—all this thanks to Comrade Stalin's personal attention.

"We have also had to add to the effectives of our Red Army. Our military budget is very much larger. We have had to make sacrifices for the defence of the Soviet and we are sure you will say the party and Government were justified in doing so.

"The Red Army is mainly of worker and peasant stock. Half of them are members of the Communist party. Dangerous alone for the instigators of war, it is the basis of general peace."

Difficult Foreign Relations

Discussing the Soviet's relations with capitalist states, he declared: "After the intrigue to use the League of Nations as an arm against the U.S.S.R. had collapsed, the Soviet agreed to join it. We consider it wise to collaborate with the League, though some do not esteem it too highly."

M. Molotoff raised a cheer for Turkey, but was rather reserved in his references to France. With Poland relations were not satisfactory, but "we intend to continue to try to cement friendly relations with that country."

Relations with Japan and Germany were distinctly difficult. Herr Hitler had not repudiated the views expressed in his book, "My Fight." The speaker's reference to the alleged superiority of the Germanic races aroused wild laughter in this All-Union Congress, where the "Non-Aryan element" is extremely strong.

Negotiations for the sale of the Soviet's Chinese Eastern Railway were apparently reaching a successful conclusion, but some circles in Japan still wanted war—and Vladivostok.

Sir E. Ovey Attacked

The speaker went on to attack Sir Esmond Ovey, the former British Ambassador to Moscow.

"Our relations with England are generally normal," said Mr. Molotoff. "If one does not count the incident with Sir Esmond Ovey, who attempted to intervene in our home affairs by interfering in the Metro-Vickers case, and for this he received a rebuff. And anyone wishing to realise our firmness could draw his own conclusions from that.

"This created big complications, but these were liquidated by the mutual efforts of both parties. Sir Esmond Ovey was replaced by another Ambassador, and favorable possibilities exist for developing Anglo-Soviet trade."

In his peroration, which evoked wild applause, M. Molotoff also attacked the foreign Press, both "bourgeois, and socialist," for "squeaking about the shooting of several tens of terrorists," and about a certain Foreign Consul implicated by the military collegium in the affair of the murder of Kiroff, the Leningrad Soviet Chief.

The name and country of this Consul have always been concealed here, and were also withheld by M. Molotoff. But, as I stated in my message of Jan. 1, he was alleged to have been M. Bisseneek, of Latvia.

Foreign Consul Charge

"The Press," went on M. Molotoff, "does not talk about those who sent these terrorists into our land. Let them expect nothing but merciless measures against these criminals, whom they defend—all this will end in scandalous failure." He then made this rather strange charge against the foreign Press:

"They are even silent about the established fact of the relations between Kiroff's murderer, Nikolaeff, and a certain foreign Consul. They are even silent about the fact that the Soviet ordered him home."

Then in ringing tones the Soviet Premier uttered this warning. "We must tell those Governments whose organs send criminals into the U.S.S.R. that they seriously try our patience. And we add: There is an end to all patience."

Sir Esmond Ovey, who went to Moscow in 1929 had the task in 1933 of putting before the Soviet Government Britain's protest at the imprisonment of the Metro-Vickers engineers on charges of sabotage. The publication of his despatches revealed outspoken comments on the situation. He did not return to Russia from a visit home to report on the affair, and is now Ambassador in Brussels.

Macon Blew Up Like Paper Bag, Inquiry Is Told

Lighthouse Keeper Says It Was So Quick He Doesn't Know Where Rip Began

Lieutenant Calvin M. Bolster, repairs officer of the Macon, told a naval court of inquiry on February 16 at San Francisco he believed failure of the upper fin caused the giant dirigible to plunge into the Pacific with a loss of two lives, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

"My opinion," he said before the hearing "is that failure of the fin involves failure of the fin structure and the strucure of the ship where the fin was supported."

The Macon "exploded like a paper sack," another witness said, and the rudderman and elevator man aboard declared the wheels were twisted from their control when the dirigible rolled.

Says Repairs Not Completed

Lieutenant Bolster testified the day previous the Macon narrowly escaped disaster while flying over Texas last year, and added that repairs to sheared-off girders had not been fully completed when it began its fatal trip. He explained the Bureau of Aeronautics had ordered they should not interfere with flight schedules.

Rear Admiral Orin G. Murfin, a member of the inquiry board, asked Lieutenant Bolster how safe he believed the Macon was after the repairs had been temporarily completed. "Do you consider the ship was structurally safer on her last flight, Rear Admiral Murfin asked, "than at the time of her delivery to the government?"

"The reinforcements had added strength," Lieutenant Bolster said. "And it was perfectly possible for the fin structure to fall and leave the hull intact." He said a fin had been carried away from the dirigible Shenandoah and the German Graf Zeppelin, but had not resulted in further damage.

The crash of the Macon was likened to "a paper sack exploding" by Henry Mille, assistant lighthouse keeper at Point Sur, the rocky promontory near which the Macon fell into the ocean.

"It all happened at one time," Miller said, so quickly that he could not see whether it was at the rear, center or forward part of the upper fin that the fabric started to rip.

Other witnesses had agreed that the "casualty" which sent the airship down was first discernible as a failure at the fin.

Chief Keeper Testifies

Thomas Henderson, keeper of the lighthouse, testified he watched the breakup through powerful glasses. "The material seemed to go to pieces and then drifted back," he said, adding: "The trouble seemed to start at the forward part of the fin. Then it worked back and seemed to raise up at the front all at once. It (the fin) tore loose at one place. Then there was a pause. Then more tearing until the entire fin appeared naked."

"The top fin just seemed to go all to pieces," Miller said. "The material seemed to go to pieces and drifted back. A considerable amount was hanging to the portion I judged to be the rudder. It seemed to me the ship dipped just a little, then seemed to bear left toward the sea. She seemed to start gaining elevation then, but she continued to make a circle and headed back south and disappeared among the clouds.

"We lost view of her at that time, but were able to follow her course about two miles by objects dropped overboard and splashing in the water."

Both Henderson and Miller said there had been nothing particularly bad about the weather at the time.

Answering a question by the Macon's chief—Commander H. V. Wiley—Henderson said that a rain squall had come up about the time the Macon was settling to the ocean surface, but that there had been no increase in the wind.

Radioman Died in 175-Foot Leap

The death plunge of Ernest Daily, radioman aboard the Macon, was described by W. H. Clarke, coxswain and rudderman, at the inquiry aboard the U. S. Tennessee.

"I left the control car just before the stern landed on the water," said Clarke. "I met Dailey in the port keel and went up to get clear of the ship. He followed me up. I kicked a hole in the outer cover and he stood there with me. We talked of the advisability of leaving the ship.

"I told Dailey it was too far to jump. Without warning he jumped feet first, turned over slowly several times and I didn't see him any more. He jumped approximately 175 feet."

After the hearing Lieutenant Commander Wiley said it was the opinion of men aboard the ship that the other victim, mess attendant Florentino Edquiba had not left it. Other officers said he apparently had been overcome by the helium gas before he could escape.

Peculiar effects of the gas, which is both odorless and without color, were explained by officers. The gas gradually causes a man's voice to rise until it becomes a squeak, and a few short whiffs of it will "knock out" a man.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Vain Glory

Bahadar Shah, Grand Mogul and King of Delhi from 1837 to 1857, was a descendant of the magnificent Akbar, and bore more than 100 pompous titles of which those enumerated in my cartoon are but a few. He was the Emperor of the Arabian Nights, Teacher of the World, Lord of all the Stars of the Firmament, and of the World. But reality was in strange contrast with his fanciful dignity.

The Kings of Delhi was only nominal sovereigns and employees of the East India Company since 1765. Bahadur was allotted only 4 feet of territory, on which he sat on a crystal throne, collecting the price of admission from curious tourists. Delhi was the center of the Sepoy Rebellion in 1857 when Bahadur was proclaimed National Emperor by the mutinous Sepoys. When the Rebellion was suppressed, Bahadur was deposed by the British authorities, who courtmartialed him and expelled him to Rangoon in 1858.

AUTHOR SPEAKS ON FLOWER ARRANGEMENT

Mr. Alfred Koehn, author, discussed the beauty of the flower arrangement and its philosophical meanings in an address before the German Asiatic club at the German club Tuesday evening.

Mr. Koehn said that the customary name for the art is "ikebana" and that it has two different meanings according to the different Chinese characters with which it can be written, namely "to put plant-cuttings into" or "to keep plant-cuttings alive" in water-filled receptacles. But he says that the word "ikebana" only refers to the obvious, and that the best masters have always given preference to the word "kwado"—the second syllable of which—"do", the Way, Course, Method, Sphere—is responsible for the wide range of thought underlying the art. He explained that "kwado" can and should give satisfaction and pleasure to the inner and spiritual side of one's nature, and should not be considered as though it were intended chiefly or solely for the practical purpose of ornamentation."

The four points of the compass, arbitrarily used in every Japanese Flower Arrangement, as well as its division into two hemispheres, the "in" and "yo"—the famous female and male principles of Chinese philosophy—expressed in the materials used and in their relation to each other, were effectively sketched out.

A brief reference to the religious origin of the art was made when he mentioned the great reformer of the Japanese Empire, Shotoku-taishi, who with Ono no imoko, is held responsible for the first Flower Arrangements on the altar of the Rokkaku Temple in Kyoto in the beginning of the seventh century. It was this temple which spread the Art and which is still the headquarters of the most venerated of the innumerable branches which have grown from the original stock.

Before describing the five main styles of Flower Arrangement, the equipment including the many different vases and baskets, boards and stands, holders, wall-tablets and the acutal tools used in making the Arrangements, were alluded to. The whole ceremonial of the "tokonoma" its component parts and the minute etiquette connected with its admiration was given due importance.

A minute description of the five main styles Rikkwa, Sunamono, Shokwa, Nageire and Moribana followed, and was greatly enhanced by actual Flower Arrangements of each kind arranged by the lecturer.

In concluding his lecture Mr. Koehn suggested what might be gained by becoming a disciple of this Art. "One would not only be able to improve the floral creations of one's home, but also gain a greater knowledge of trees, plants and flowers, their forms, their varying phases, their individual beauties. Again there is the pleasure of cultivating previously unknown plants in our gardens—but besides this there is much greater reward. The enthusiastic follower knows that his success is due not chiefly to the dexterity but to the discipline which the Art has engendered in his mind and soul. Thus Flower Arrangement as understood and practised in Japan is at once a fine Art and a religious philosophy through and by which one succeeds in merging the Ego with Nature. It brings a deeper love of beauty and also the greater blessings of calmness and peace of mind, inestimable benefits desired by the whole world," he said. "The outlines of Flower Arrangement as given in this lecture are amplified in a work on Flower Arrangement written by Mr. Koehn which will shortly be published in Tokyo by KYO BUN KWAN, the well-known Publishers and Booksellers on Ginza. The book has 500 text illustrations and 85 plates.

Hands across the Canadian border were extended and grasped by Cordell Hull, Seceretary of State, and Richard B. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada, at the annual dinner of the Canadian Society of New York at the Hotel Biltmore on Feb. 16.

Mr. Hull spoke of the United States foreign policy of "the good neighbor" and affirmed it in relation to Canada as well as the rest of the world. Mr. Bennett's address proceeded more along economic lines and was climaxed by his expression of joy over the prospect of trade agreements between his country and the United States according to the New York Herald Tribune.

"The willingness of Congress to delegate to your great President the power to make trade agreements," said Mr. Bennett, "his prompt exercise of that power, the splendid crusade of the Secretary of State for better international economic association are cause for rejoicing, I believe, throughout the world.

Canada Will Cooperate

"The recent statement of the Secretary of State of the intention to negotiate a trade agreement with the government of Canada has been received. I can assure you, with the utmost satisfaction in all parts of our Dominion. And I promise you that in the fuller practical manifestations of this principle of economic co-operation, you will not find us laggard. Our government will join with the Adminstration in an earnest endeavor to establish the greatest possible measure of international trade, realizing that from it must flow benefits, not only to our own countries, but indirectly, and in incalculable extent, to a world which is still the plaything of chaotic economic forces heretofore defiant of every well-intentioned effort to compose them. For at this time of growing economic nationalism a bold play by us for greater international economic freedom may be the means, I verily believed, of checking a certain violent movement toward a kind of isolationism which, the by-product of the World War, we must be rid of before there can be any real promise of world peace."

Mr. Hull, for his part, assured the 400 former Canadians who are now citizens of the United States, that he had hope that the trade negotiations will remove many of the obstacles which had been costly to the commerce of both countries. He also said that the United States could no longer pursue its former policy of "splendid isolation," but, due to the speeding up of communications and the influence of technical discovery, it must recognize that its policies are those of a world power. Its "good neighbor" policy, which he declared was in harmony with "the great need of the modern world," is particularly applicable to Canada, he said.

Good Neighbors

"Aside from the common bond created through community of language, traditions and cultural heritage," Mr. Hull said, "the nature of our northern frontier has made of Canada and the United States outstanding examples of good neighbors for over a century. Our two countries, including Alaska, have the longest common boundaries anywhere in the globe. We are inevitably the most neighborly of neighbors and a foreign policy on the part of either country which attempted to fly in the face of this fact would be suicidal, not to say impossible. Thus, out of a circumstance of geography, has grown a sense of trust and mutual security which it would be hard to duplicate."

Mr. Hull adverted to the recent reciprocity treaty with Cuba as representative of our attitude toward our neighbors to the south. As to Europe and Asia, the four pillars of a sound peace structure, the Secretary said, could be summed up, "first, the renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy; second, a promise of non-aggression; third consultation in the event of a threat to peace, and fourth, non-interference on our part with such measures of constraint as may be brought against a deliberate violator of peace."

These pillars, he added admonitorily, might readily crumble if they were built "on the shifting foundations of unrestricted and competitive armaments."

"After all, the Roman Empire knew long periods of peace," continued the secretary. "But the essence of the Pax Romana was predominant over wide areas, a peace of inequality based on force. The kind of peace we envisage, and I think it is the kind that the people of all nations, great and small, desire at heart and pray for, is the peace of friends who feel secure in their independence, not through immense armaments, the balance of which must again and again be destroyed by uneven competition, but through the give-and-take of political and economic co-operation which benefits no country to the detriment of others."

Tariffs In Canada

Tariffs in Canada, Premier Bennett admitted, were too high, but that, he said, was not primarily the fault of Canada but of the United States, which first started the upping of duties. In Canada, he said, the depression had been largely conquered and the government was abandoning the emergency measures called into being by the depression to take up reform measures.

"The inequitable distribution of the benefits of the capitalist system," he said, "is a grave challenge to our well-being. The old complacency with which only a short time ago some very respectable people and nations regarded the acute social disequilibrium provoked by a defective capitalist system, has given way, thank God, to an appreciation of the joint and several responsibility of all classes for the national weal; surely a striking proof of the regeneration!

"Recovery measures have done well by us, but they are based on the assumption that our capitalist system is relatively flawless. And the majority view in Canada is against that assumption. The majority view is that the system is defective and requires reform. We maintain that, without reform, substantial progress is improbable and recurring depressions are inevitable.

"Consequently we are for reform—reform so absolute and embracing that, as far as lies within the power of one nation, want and suffering and unemployment which are visible signs of the system's imperfections, will cease and there will come again that security and happiness upon which is based the whole concept of Christian civilization."

Among the distinguished guests at the dinner were William Duncan Herridge, Canadian Minister to the United States; Ralph William Close, minster from the Union of South Africa; Michael MacWhite, Minister from the Irish Free State, and Sir Gerald Campbell, British Consul General to New York.

50 Colleges Drawn To Forum At Vassar

Undergraduates Attend 2-Day Model Senate

A model senate in which undergraduates of fifty colleges and universities will try to reach agreement on three important national problems will be conducted at Vassar College on Feb. 22 and 23, states a report in the New York Herald Tribune dated Feb. 16.

The article continues:

The measures upon which this group will be asked to pass concern unemployment insurance, lynching and American participation in the League of Nations. Twenty-one institutions already have accepted the invitation to send representatives to Vassar; there will be groups from such distant points as Leland Stanford University and Antioch College, Iowa.

The conference is sponsored by the Vassal Political Association, of which Katherine McIneny, of South Bend, Ind., is president. Miss McInerny believes students of the country are vitally interested in the social progress of the present Administration.

"We, too, are wondering where the United States is going," she said today. "There is a movement that has taken the undergraduate body of American college along paths never tread before by the student. Young people of the country are vitally interested in what is happening in Washington and the capitals of our states.

"The future belongs to us. We will inherit the burden of taxation. We will have to carry on whatever social program the present generation decides upon. It is no more than right that we should express our opinions through such an agency as this model senate. Vassar College is proud to be the agency through which this opinion reaches articulation."

It is planned to have two representatives from each of the forty-eight states participating in the conference. Each of the representatives will be asked to serve on one of three committees to consider the three propositions. In committee the general propositions are to be worked into final form for submission to the senate.

The institutions already having accepted invitations to the conference include Lehigh, Hamilton, Rochester, Elmira, Amherst Antioch, Princeton, New Rochelle, Skidmore, Radcliffe, Leland Stanford, Dartmouth, Wellesley, William Smith, Alleghany, New Jersey College for Women, Union, Layette, Mount Holyoke and Rutgers.

Lehigh University will represent, by assignment, the interests of Senator Huey P. Long and the State of Louisiana. Vassar's representatives will appear for the pressure group, the lobbyists, including the Chambers of Commerce, the American Federation of Labor, the Communists and the religious group. The Leland Stanford debating team, now touring the country, will appear for California. Antioch will represent the State of Iowa. Princeton, by assignment, will appear for the State of Texas and Vice-President Garner.

The committee in charge of the conference includes Virginia Canavan, '35, chairman; Lucy Youndt, '35; Mary Davis, '36; Virginia Packard, '36, and Ruth Goodman, '36. Miss McInerny is ex-officio member of the committee.

Delegates to the conference will be housed in Cushing Hall, one wing of which will be vacated by students for the occasion. Dr. Henry Noble MacCracken, president of Vassar, and Professor Charles Gordon Post jr. will act as chaperons.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Shanghai

Probably no great city of the world has enjoyed a growth as phenomenal as that of Shanghai, China, which, in the short period of ninety years, has grown from a small town on the mud flats of the Whangpoo River to the fifth seaport of the world and the most important city of the Far East. It is the marketplace of more than 250,000,000 people of the Yangtze River basin, and today Shanghai's real estate values are second only to those of Manhattan Island in New York City—all because of the tiny portion of land set aside in 1843, known as the International Settlement, where foreigners live and trade free from the dangers of China's internal troubles.

This astounding growth, patterned after modern Western cities, is reflected in Shanghai's metropolitan atmosphere of modern banks, theatres, social clubs, race courses and night clubs, but most of all in radio. There are more than 100 broadcasting stations in Shanghai while New York boats of 20, and London has only 2. This large number of broadcasting stations is due to the fact that there are no government restrictions on broadcasters and broadcasting in China. A great many of these broadcasters are free lance transmitters who constantly wander over the frequency band. As a result there is pandemonium on the Shanghai airwaves, all but half a dozen of the stations being Chinese.

Drafts On British Control In India Follow New Bill

Command Paper Gives Rules For Governor-General And Governors

The second reading of the Government of India Bill by the House of Commons on Feb. 11 has been followed promptly by fulfilment of the undertaking given by the Secretary of State for India, Sir Samuel Hoare, to issue drafts of the "Instruments of Instructions to the Governor-General and Governors." They are given in a Command Paper (4805, price 3d.) issued Feb. 15.

The drafts are not issued at the present stage for formal submission to Parliament for approval, since this step cannot be taken until the Bill is on the Statute book, says The Times, London. They are presented "as illustrating the content of these documents which the Government have in mind." The Joint Select Committee, it will be recalled, approved the proposal of the White Paper for a "novel procedure" in respect of these Instructions—namely, that opportunity should be given to Parliament to express an opinion upon such Instrument before it is finally issued by the Crown; and for the process to be extended not only to the original Instrument but also to any subsequent amendment of it. The Committee considered that "in no other way can Parliament so effectively exercise an influence upon Indian constitutional development."

Specific Recommendations

The drafts are based in the main on the specific recommendations of the Joint Select Committee, and also reproduce some passages and phrases which are contained in the existing Instructions to the Governor-General and the Governors. In view of the current discussions on the question of a definite allusion to Dominion status in the legislation now before Parliament particular interest attaches to the repetition in the last paragraph of the Governor-General's Instructions, now numbered XXXI., of the substance of the existing direction:

"It is Our will and pleasure that Our Governor-General should so exercise the trust which we have reposed in him that the partnership between India and the United Kingdom within Our Empire may be furthered, to the end that India may attain its due place among Our Dominions."

The Instruments direct both the Governor-General and Governors to do all that in them lies

"to maintain standards of good administration; to encourage religious toleration, cooperation, and good will among all classes and creeds; and to promote all measures making for moral, social, and economic welfare. In the Instrument to Governors it is added that they should promote measures tending to fit all classes of the population to take their due share in the public life and government of the Province.'"

Thirteen paragraphs of the Instrument to the Governor-General, including that just quoted, are "in regard to the executive authority of the Federation."

"In appointing Ministers he will 'consult with the person who, in his judgment, is most likely to command a stable majority in the Legislature,' but is to 'bear constantly in mind the need for fostering a sense of joint responsibility among his Ministers.' While he will be required under the Act, after consultation with Ministers, to exercise certain functions 'on his individual judgment,' he is to be studious 'so to exercise his powers as not to enable his Ministers to rely upon his special responsibilities in order to relieve themselves of responsibilities which are properly their own.'"

Further paragraphs relate to the Governor-General's special responsibility for safeguarding financial stability and the legitimate interests of minorities; but he is not to regard as entitled to his protection "any body of persons by reason only that they share a view on a particular question which has not found favour with the majority." Reference to the safeguarding of rights of public servants is followed by two paragraphs regarding the prevention of discrimination. The second of these outlines his special responsibility for the prevention of measures which would subject goods of British Indian origin imported into India to discriminatory or penal treatment. The responsibility extends to "indirect discrimination by means of differential treatment of various types of products."

Consultation with Ministers

The Governor-General is enjoined to encourage the practice of joint consultation between himself, his Councillors, and his Ministers.

"And seeing that the defence of India must to an increasing extent be the concern of the Indian people it is Our will in especial that Our Governor-General should have regard to this instruction in his administration of the Department of Defence; and notably that he shall bear in mind the desirability of ascertaining the views of his Ministers when he shall have occasion to consider matters relating to the general policy of appointing Indian officers to Our Indian Forces, or the employment of Our Indian Forces on service outside India."

It is further enjoined that the Federal Ministry, and in particular the Finance Minister, shall be brought into consultation before Estimates of proposed expenditure for the service of defence are settled and laid before the Federal Legislature.

Relations of States

Under the Act the Governor-General will exercise at his discretion certain powers affecting the relations between the Federation and Provinces and States. In their discharge he is to be directed to "give unbiased consideration as well to the views of the Governments of Provinces and Federated States as to those of his own Ministers, when those views are in conflict and, in particular, when it falls to him to exercise his power to issue orders to the Governor of a Province, or directions to the Ruler of a Federated State, for the purpose of securing that the executive authority of the Federation is not impeded or prejudiced, or his power to determine whether provincial law or federal law shall regulate a matter in the sphere in which both Legislatures have power to make laws.

"It is Our desire that Our Governor-General shall by all reasonable means encourage consultation with a view to common action between the Federation, Provinces, and Federated States."

The provisions in respect to legislation are those recommended by the joint Select Committee; but note may be taken of the direction that the power vested in the Governor-General to stay proceedings upon a Bill, clause, or amendment in the Federal Legislature in the discharge of his special responsibility for the prevention of grave menace to peace and tranquillity shall not be exercised unless, in his judgment, the public discussion of the Bill, clause, or amendment would itself endanger peace and tranquility.

Possible Disputes

In respect to possible disputes with Indian States, it is intimated in footnotes to relevant paragraphs that "the procedure for the determination of the right in the case of a dispute rests with the Crown's representative for the conduct of relations with the States." Under the Bill it is to be lawful for his Majesty to appoint one person to fill both offices—that of Governor-General and that of the Crown's representative for the States.

The instructions to the Governor of separated Burma "will be on lines similar to those of the Governor-General, with the necessary adaptations."

Doctors Assail Federal Health Insurance Plan

Medical Association House Of Delegates Condemns Wagner And Epstein Bills

The organized medical profession of the United States proclaimed strong opposition recently to the New Deal legislation for health insurance.

At its first special executive session since war time, the House of Delegates of the American Medical Association, 175 outstanding physicians representing 100,000 or more, voted approval of a committee report condemning "all forms of compulsory sickness insurance, whether administered by the Federal government, the governments of the individual states, or by any individual industry, community or similar body," according to the Chicago correspondent of the New York Times.

The meeting was called to discuss the Wagner bill, now before Congress, which represents the Roosevelt administration's intent for health insurance, and the "so-called Epstein bill," introduced before numerous state legislatures. The bills were turned over to a reference committee of eight, headed by Dr. Harry H. Wilson, of California, and including Dr. N. B. Van Etten, of New York, which began its study of the bills.

"Your reference committee," the report said, "believing that regimentation of the medical profession and lay control of medical practice will be fatal to medical progress, and inevitably lower the quality of medical service now available to the American people, condemns unreservedly all propaganda, legislation or political manipulation leading to these ends.....

"The house of delegates of the American Medical Association reaffirms its opposition to all forms of compulsory sickness insurance, whether administered by the Federal government, the governments of the individual states or by any individual industry, community or similar body. It reaffirms also its encouragement to local medical organizations to establish plans for the provision of adequate medical service for all of the people, adjusted to present economic conditions, by voluntary budgeting to meet the costs of illness.....

"However, so many inconsistencies and incompatibilities are apparent in the report of the President's committee on economic security thus far presented that many more facts and details are necessary for a proper consideration.

"The house of delegates recognizes the necessity under conditions of emergency for Federal aid in meeting basic needs of the indigent; it deprecates, however, any provision whereby Federal subsidies for medical services are administered and controlled by a law bureau. . . .

"The house of delegates condemns as pernicious that section of the Wagner bill which creates a social insurance board without specification of the character of its personnel to administer functions essentally medical in character and demanding technical knowledge not available to those without medical training.

"The so-called Epstein bill, proposed by the American Association for Social Security, now being promoted in the individual states, is a vicious, deceptive, dangerous and demoralizing measure. . . . It introduces such hazardous principles as multiple taxation, inordinate costs, extravagant administration and an inevitable trend toward social and financial bankruptcy. . . .

"There is no model plan which is a cure-all for the social ills any more than there is panacea for the physical ills that affect mankind. There are now more than 150 plans for medical service undergoing study and trial in various communities in the United States. Your bureau of medical economics has studied these plans and is now ready and willing to advise medical societies in the creation and operation of such plans."

Profiteering On Jubilee Begins Early In London

Commercializing of the King of England's jubilee next May has already begun, almost three months ahead of the event, says the New York Times in its Feb. 16 issue.

The item continues: An advertisement will appear on the front page of the Times, London, tomorrow offering seats on Ludgate Hill, "the best place to see the arrival of their Majesties at St. Paul's."

"Only twenty excellent front row seats left at £50 (about $250) each," the advertiser asserts. "Others at £10 and £20."

At this rate, profiteering at the jubilee promises to be more blatant than anything known during the recent wedding of the Duke of Kent. This time the opportunities will be all the greater since the King and Queen will ride through four miles of streets on their accession day and later make four separate drives in various parts of London.

She Preferred Death

In 1841 two brothers, inhabitants of Meknes, fought over the hand of their cousin, the beautiful Solica Hachuel, aged 13. When Sultan Abd el Rahman, ruler of Morocco, heard of the quarrel he ordered the girl to appear before him. During the audience the Emperor ordered her to become his wife and empress of Morocco. The girl indignantly refused to marry the old ruler, and was sentenced to be executed for her disobedience. Once more she was given a chance to reconsider, but she chose death. She is buried at the cemetery of the Mellah in Fez, and the women of Morocco make weekly pilgrimages to her grave, where they embrace and kiss the gravestone while they say their prayers.

Lone Church Spire of Sussex

At Dallington, Sussex, England, there is a church spire that was built in a field as the result of a wager. There is no church beneath the Spire and its only purpose is to be seen. A landowner in Dallington made a wager with a friend that he could see Dallington Church spire from his house, but when he came home the real spire could not be seen. Not to be bested, however, the landowner delayed inviting his friend out to see for himself until the artificial spire was built within sight of his home.

USSR Govt. Sees Plot To Seize The Ukraine

Memel would receive special status, with free trade and communications to the Polish hinterland. Gdynia, the Polish port in the Danzig corridor, would have similar status under a German regime. The two cities would thus balance nicely.

Meanwhile, with the aid of German bayonets, Poland would take the Ukraine and restore Silesia to Germany. That is to say, settlement of one of Europe's most vexatious questions would be reached at the Soviet's expense.

It is believed here that Germany is seriously envisaging such plans and already has received assurance of Polish agreement. It now remains for Germany to obtain British consent and to put France in a position of such isolation that the French will not be able to do anything when Germany and Poland are ready to march against the Soviet.

It is thought here that Germany will not move until Japan is ready, and Japan will not have sufficiently digested what it swallowed from China—that is, she will not have built roads and railroads and consolidated her sovereignty—for a year or two.

In the meantime, say the Russians, "our strength increases with each day that passes."

Russia's confidence in her own strength is well-nigh justified. Russian production of steel and iron today is greater than Germany's and second only to that of the United States. In the development of gas, guns, airplanes and other appurtenances of war, this country has made enormous strides.

The Red Army has been numerically increased, and the Soviet seems confident it could undertake a war on two fronts. It does not want war, but does not fear war.

JAPANESE ADVANTAGES

"A young man who starts his career in Japan today has advantages not enjoyed by those of former generations."

Mrs. E. Hamilton Holmes, British consul in Yokohama, so declared in addressing the graduates of the Yokohama Higher Commercial school at the institution's annual commencement exercises recently.

Mr. Holmes declared:

The students of the School who are receiving their diplomas today will enter upon your life's career at a period in which the problems of international trade are more acute than at any time in the world's history. The chaotic state of the national currencies, largely owing to the unequal distribution of the world's supplies of gold which has forced most countries off the gold standard; the displacement of manual labor by automatic machinery which has increased output to a degree which has outstripped the capacity for absorption; the endeavors of countries formerly chiefly agricultural to create industries for which they are not naturally adapted; and the artificial restriction upon international trade which have resulted from these unnatural conditions, to mention only some of the disturbing factors, have combined to create a situation in which the most intense competition exists. If this situation continues, it is by no means impossible that the financial system upon which commerce is based today may break down.

"Some of you, on leaving this School, will enter the national service of your country, at home or abroad; some of you will enter upon a business career, others will engage in industry: all of you will begin your careers in a troubled world, in which it will be a hard struggle to make a living and an even harder struggle to attain success.

"But the young man who starts his career in Japan today has advantages which were not enjoyed by those of former generation. There has never been a nation which has made such progress within a short period of time, historically speaking, as Japan. Seventy or eighty years ago Japan was, in a commercial sense, in her infancy. Her merchants had little experience of the science of commerce: facilities for commercial training were almost non-existent, and such trade as she was able to command was rather because she was able to supply the world with certain commodities, such as silk, which were not produced elsehere and because she herself required Western manufactures which she was not able to produce than because she was equipped to produce goods in competition with the products of other countries.

"Today all this is changed. Japan is a world competitor in a thousand products and her imports are increasingly raw materials for her own industries and decreasingly manufactured goods. Her busy factories are equipped with the most modern machinery, her industries are highly and scientifically organized, and as the result of this efficiency she is able to turn out vast quantities of goods and to export them at competitive prices. Her business men are trained in specialized schools such as this, and after leaving the schools, in highly organized business offices under experience superiors, and are no longer at a disadvantage as compared with foreign merchants better equipped by training and experience than they. Japan of today is recognized as a great power in commerce as in international politics, and as a great power she has her responsibilities as well as advantages.

"The world today suffers perhaps even more from mutual distrust than from the disabilities of which I have spoken, some of which indeed themselves arise chiefly from distrust. Until mutual confidence between the nations is restored there can be little hope of permanent recovery of international trade and of the world-wide depression.

"It appears to me from my reading that it is generally recognized that restrictions upon international trade must be relaxed, but that no nation is willing to be the first to remove those restrictions lest she fall behind in the international race, and that efforts to agree upon a mutual and simultaneous effort to relax them fail. No nation is willing to forego an advantage not to suffer another nation to gain an advantage not now enjoyed, with the result that trade throughout the world is crippled, unemployment continues and distrust increases.

"Surely there must be a remedy for this state of affair. The best brains have so far failed to solve the problem, but there must be a solution somewhere, and may perhaps be found, not in the older generation, but with the younger. I appeal to you who are now beginning your careers to cultivate a spirit of good-will and accommodation rather than of distrust and antagonism, and to realise that in all transactions, in all bargains and contracts, individual or international, there must be a spirit of give and take if business is to run smoothly, and that a willingness to make concessions is more likely to result in firm friendships and in lasting connections than the endeavor to extract the most in business negotiations.

You may not at the outset of your careers be in a position to conduct responsible negotiations, but the time will come when you will have opportunities of putting these principles in practice to the mutual benefit of yourselves and of those with whom you are conducting business.

"I congratulate the graduates in today's ceremony on the successful termination of their studies at this School and I wish them every success in their future career."

Spain To Bolster Up Defenses In Spite Of Opinion

Although Public More Strongly Against War, Cabinet Plans Overhauling

Although Spanish public opinion becomes daily more strongly opposed to war, the Lerroux Cabinet has resolved to overhaul the defenses of the country which it considers have been neglected to the point of danger, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

The Balearic Isles are to be fortified wherever this may be needed and 12 gunboats are to be built as soon as Cortes passes a credit for the purpose.

The weakness of the Spanish navy has been more and more apparent as the swift growth of other foreign navies made any attempt to keep pace with them—even at a distance—out of the question. Gen. Primo de Rivera planned to build a large fleet of submarines, the cost being so much less than cruisers and battleships. However, the Republic did not even take over one built at Cadiz by a private contractor, who sold it recently to the Turkish Government. Today the Spanish fleet mainly consists of four cruisers.

Tourists and Tunnel

Two factors appear to have stirred up interest in the navy. One is the interests of "tourists" in the fortifications and topography of the Balearics and the strong impression existing in official circles that in a European conflagration this valuable Mediterranean key-point might constitute a danger zone for Spain.

The other is the growing interest in the possibilities of a tunnel under the Straits of Gibraltar. Semiofficial statements recently referred to the progress made in the soundings and the departure of a commission for Paris and London to obtain expert advice in the matter of the submarine route to be followed.

If, as is affirmed, Spain can obtain financial assistance for this vast project, both in France and Great Britain, a political understanding with the French Government seems natural, based on Spain's willingness to allow the troops in Morocco to pass through her territory.

Trade negotiations with France may show a tendency toward clearing the way for rapprochement made difficult recently by the increasing restrictions placed by France on imports from Spain.

Surete and Shock Troops

Meanwhile, other Spanish services are in the news. The high command of the army is about to be reorganized. The police force on which the regime depends now so largely for its safety, is to be readjusted by the fusion of its two most important sections, the "Cuerpo de Seguridad" (Surete) and the Shock Corps. It was the latter especially which bore the brunt of the isolated fighting during the October revolt.

In future, if the plans are approved by Cortes, the "Surete" will combine with the shock police throughout Spain, under the command of generals, colonels, and other officers, as a militarized body, to exercise control in the main centers of the peninsula and maintain peace. Though the Republic intended the shock police to operate unarmed, its members are now very finely armed even when in mufti. The Civil Guards will operate mainly on high roads and far up-country and, like the newer forces, in considerably augmented numbers.

On the return of Maj. Ramon Franco from the United States, where he has been investigating American methods in aviation, the air "ace" will submit plans to the Government for a reorganization of the Spanish air force. Civil aviation has recently shown a tendency to develop longer distance flying and Madrid will shortly have a daily service to Paris. Twelve Moth machinese were recently delivered in Madrid to be used for training purposes. While Spaniards have not shown great air consciousness as yet, the press is clamoring for attention to aviation as an arm of the defense.

American Church In Berlin Closes

Capital's Congregation, Taxed Heavily By Nazis, Dissolves

The American Church of Berlin, founded in 1867, and its library closed their door on February 21 and the church corporation was dissolved by a vote of its governing board. The keys to the building, which belongs to the American and Foreign Christian Union, were placed in the custody of Consul General Douglas Jenkins, according to the New York Times.

There is reason to believe that the breakdown of the Berlin institution presages the collapse of the two other American churches in Germany, the Episcopal parishes of Munich and Dresden. The latter report that they are on the verge of ruin as a result of the Reichsbank's consistent refusal to allow them to receive contributions from abroad in registered marks.

The financial situation of the Protestant Episcopal Church's national council in the United States has also led to the withdrawal of funds that the churches formerly received from that denomination's domestic and foreign missonary society.

The Berlin church was non-sectarian. In dissolving the corporation the governing board, of which James Lee, son of the late Ivy Lee, was chairman, announced that it had taken the action because of "the Berlin American colony's indifference and its refusal to support the church."

The Munich church is reported to be unable to exist for more than a few months unless it receives immediate aid.

The rector of the Dresden church says it will be in a position to continue its services if Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, the Reichsbank's president, agrees to allow it to receive foreign contributions in registered marks. The Dresden church in any case will keep its doors open for another year, and its library, which contains some 3,000 volumes, has been quite successful.

The American Church of Berlin has had a distinguished history. For several years Elihu Root was on its governing board. The board's first minutes bear the signature of George Bancroft, the historian. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, Dr. Arthur Twining Hadley, later president of Yale University, and Phillips Brooks served the church, Mrs. Grover Cleveland was treasurer of the fund gathered for the construction of the Gothic church building at the beginning of the century, and the tower was donated by John D. Rockefeller.

Through the closing of the church a Confessional Synod congregation that had been made homeless by a decree of Dr. Ludwig Mueller, the Nazi Reich Bishop, is also left without quarters. The confessional parish's pastor, Dr. Dehn, found a refuge in the American church after he had been forced out of several halls by the Nazis. He is expected to appeal to the American and Foreign Christian Union to allow him to use the building temporarily.

The council on several occasions has expressed warm sympathy with the stand taken by the pastors in opposition to Reich Bishop Mueller and the Nazi German Christians.

Berlin Church Heavily Taxed

The American Church in Berlin has been confronted with financial difficulties for some time, according to the Rev. Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, foreign secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Neither Dr. Leiper nor the Federal Council of Churches has any connection with the Berlin church, but Dr. Leiper has had close unofficial contact with it and is at present host to the Rev. Ewart Turner, the last pastor of the church who is lecturing in this country.

Dr. Leiper said that the church had been heavily taxed by the German Government. In addition, he explained, the congregation had dwindled in recent times because the American colony in Berlin now numbers about 600 persons, whereas, formerly it numbered about 2,000 or 3,000.

The church building was at one time controlled by a committee of Americans living in Berlin. A few years ago, according to Dr. Leiper, the title to the property was transferred from that committee to the American and Foreign Christian Union, an interdenominational organization consisting of clergymen and laymen, most of whom live in the metropolitan area.

Dr. Leiper said that when the title was transferred the German Government sought to impose an extremely heavy transfer tax but this tax was reduced somewhat.

Detroit Building Car Along Lines Of Modern Plane

New Rear-Engined Automobile Will Be Little House On Wheels

The Stout Scarab car, now being built in Detroit is a direct descendent of the modern airplane, rather than of the horseless carriage of the "gay nineties." In it, America has what is generally accepted to be its first rear-engined automobile and among the first to approach true streamlining, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

While conventional automobile designers retreat this year from their last season's efforts to impose airplane features upon 30-year-old basic designs, William B. Stout, former Ford airplane designer, has discarded such precedents and made direct application of airplane principles to road conditions.

The new car resembles the shape of the Egyptian beetle, for which it is named. It looks rather as though it is running in reverse, for it is large ond roomy in front and slender behind, where the engine is placed.

Provides for Side Winds

Streamlining exactly as used in airplanes would not have been efficient for the reason that airplanes are always heading into the wind, while automobiles and trains encounter side winds. In the Scarab, Mr. Stout inclined the side walls and windows so that such air currents would pass over the car with the least possible resistance. The same principle was used when Mr. Stout designed the streamlined Union Pacific train.

Such streamlining, it is claimed, not only reduces drag—and consequently saves gas—at high speeds, but also facilitates steering and increases roadability.

The placing of the power plant in the rear makes this streamlining possible, and also provides for a better distribution of weight and consequent easier riding. Better braking and a lessened tendency to skid are also claimed.

Can Keep Cool in Summer

An added advantage, as far as summer passenger comfort is concerned, is that hot air and fumes cannot enter the car at all.

One of the conventional relics of early high-slung, topheavy cars, is the running board or "step up."

By doing away with these, baby Austin cars have for some years been given seats as wide as larger vehicles. Free of the force of precedent, Mr. Stout applied the same idea to his full-sized Scarab, with the result that it is so roomy inside that it is possible to equip it with sleeping accommodations for two people by a clever arrangement of the seats and chairs provided for daytime use. There is more than five inches more headroom than in the average car.

New riding ease results from a new system of body suspension in which the points of support are considerably above the center of gravity, so that the body hangs in much the manner of a hammock.

Each Wheel Has Spring

All four wheels are given independent coil spring mounting of the airplane type. The body and chassis are built in one piece on a foundation of alloy steel tube hoops. The total weight is 1800 pounds.

V-8 engine of 100 horsepower provides the power. Controls are of the conventional type. The driver's seat is in the usual position and is fastened to the floor, while the other chairs and seats are movable. A hinged table, when raised into place, gives the car the appearance of a lounge.

It is not intended to go into the mass production of Scarabs this year. Instead the Stout Company plans to manufacture about 100 cars and place them in the hands of selected representatives throughout the country.

The Scarab is not entirely without successful precedent, for a car of similar type has been in satisfactory use in England for some time.

Champion of the Rod

The school system of less than a century ago was dominated by the Rod, and corporal chastisement was the only approved means of education. Johann Jacob Hauberle (or Heberle) must have been a particular devotee of the Rod. He kept an accurate record of all punishments administered by him during the 51 years and 7 months in which he taught in a Swabian town. At his retirement it was found that he had handed out a total of 911,529 blows with a cane and 1,291,644,644 blows with his hand. In addition he had dealt 24,010 blows with a rod, distinct and separate from the caning total. Besides, he made boys kneel on peas 777 times the culprit was made to kneel on a triangular piece of wood. 12,763 blows with a Bible or another book are referred to as "notabenes." He also used 3,000 cuss words of which 1,000 were his own invention. Hauberle died in the first half of the 19th century.

BISHOP MCKIM RETURNING

The dean of all foreign missionaries, Bishop John McKim who first came to Japan 55 years ago last October, is returning on the N.Y.K. liner, Chichibu Maru, today after having spent the winter in Honolulu.

Last fall, Bishop McKim resigned his position and left Japan, his plans indefinite. However, he said at that time that he didn't believe he could stay away from Japan very long. "It is the greatest country in the world," he told a reporter for The Japan Times. "I have spent so much of my life here that Japan means more to me than you can ever know."

True to his expectations, Bishop McKim is returning. When he first came to Japan, foreign hats were just beginning to be worn. That was just one of the indications of the changes which he saw on every side. When he left Japan last fall, he declared that the country has made such a marvelous progress in every manner that it was impossible even for him to think that the Japan he reached 55 years ago ever existed in more than a dream.

Bishop McKim was born 84 years ago in Pittsfield, Mass. He received his theological training at Racine, Wis. His first preaching was done at Lockport, Ill., a little town 30 miles from Chicago, to which he drove week-ends. A talk he had with a Japanese who had come to America as a stowaway, fired him with ambition to see Japan.

Famous among church workers is Bishop McKim's reply to a cablegram asking if church property was destroyed in the great earthquake. His reply was, "All lost but my faith in God."

U.S.S.R. Against Making Classics Teach Marxism

Objects To Revision Of Old Dramas To Replace Recent Propaganda Plays

The Commissariat of Education, which controls most Soviet theaters, is expeced to take measures soon against the widespread practice of Soviet producers in tampering with the classics of drama, often to give them a "Marxian" interpretation, reports Mr. Ralph W. Barnes in his Moscow dispatch to the New York Herald Tribune. His report in full follows: This mania for revision of everything from Shakespeare down is the accompaniment of a sharp trend away from propaganda plays based on contemporary subject matter and back to the classical drama, which began about three years ago.

The reaction from too much crude propaganda on the stage was hailed in some circles abroad as a return of the Soviet theater to common sense, but it soon appeared that even the classics were to be inoculated with an element of propaganda. The Vakhtan, government theater in Moscow, went so far as to claim that "Hamlet" had always been misunderstood and that its own version, in which the Prince of Denmark was disclosed as interested solely in securing the crown and power, contained the secret of what Shakespeare really had in mind.

A Soviet Rivalry

At times recently the Soviet theaters have appeared to be trying to outdo each other in thinking up novel interpretations of classical dramatic material to replace the traditional interpretations. A number of influential Soviet critics condemned the "Marxian" "Hamlet" and had words of criticism for other propagandized classics which appeared on the stage subsequently. This week they discovered a new case of "desecration of the world's dramatic treasure" for their condemnation.

The occasion was the opening at the Kamerny Theater of "Egyptian Nights." The play, for which Alexander Tairoff, director of the Kamerny, is responsible, is based on what Shakespeare, Shaw and Pushkin contributed to the subject of the love life of Cleopatra. Now some of the critics are prepared to concede that "Egyptian Nights" is a superior production in several respects, but nearly all of them take Tairoff to task without mincing words for having juggled with the works of Shakespeare.

Asks "Greater Care"

"Though this production has certain real dramatic merits, it teaches the lesson," writes the critic of the "Vechernaya Moskva," "that the world's classical inheritance should be handled with greater care. In fact, the merging of Shakespeare, Shaw and Pushkin has contributed nothing to the world's literary treasure. Shaw receives the worst deal, for in this play the great Irish dramatist hardly even smiles. His glittering characters have lost all trace of their impertinence and pluck. As for Shakespeare's tragedy, crumpled as it is into two acts, it has become almost incomprehensible."

The critic of the "Rabochaya Moska" is hardly less caustic.

"What is there in common," he asks, "between Shaw's satirical play, Pushkin's unfinished poem and Shakespeare's historical tragedy? Nothing whatever. Tairoff's composition is nothing but a mechanical merger of the three authors with the result that the ideas of philosophy of each are hopelessly jumbled. Cleopatra alone remains intact. Everything else reaches the stage in ruins and splinters."

More Criticism

Echoing the comments of his colleagues, the reviewer for "Za Industrializatsia" insists that "Shaw's biting, ironical tongue harmonizes not at all with the pathos of Shakespeare's tragedy, while Pushkin's poem is entirely a foreign substance in the play."

It is only fair to note that Tairoff is not the first to have performed major operations of one type or another on Antony and Cleopatra. In 1813 Kemble combined Dryden's "All for Love" with Shakespeare's play and added to the latter a scene in which the bodies of Antony and Cleopatra were carried into a mausoleum. Fifty years earlier David Garrick transposed the scenes, omitted half the characters and permitted its favorite actor to speak many lines intended for roles other than that which he played. Even Tairoff hardly can be charged with more.

Man Suffers Holdup, Car Smash In Hour

Victim Forgets First Incident In Hectic Auto Ride

Charles Anderson, of 319 Eighty-third Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., thought his night's adventure was over on Feb. 16 when his yells scared away two men who atttacked him, apparently with the idea of robbing him, on Eighty-second Street between Narrows Avenue and Colonial Road, Brooklyn, but he was mistaken. That was just the start.

Mr. Anderson is a partner in a dairy store at 8718 Third Avenue, Brooklyn. He was delivering butter and eggs on Eighty-second Street and was just getting into his car when the two thugs began beating him, says the New York Herald Tribune. His cries brought people running from the'r houses and the footpads took to their heels.

Half-dazed by the attack, Mr. Anderson asked if there wasn't some one among the spectators who would drive him to the Fort Hamilton police station, at Fifth Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street, so he could report the attack. His eyes happened to be resting upon William Arkin, of 321 Eighty-sixth Street, nineteen years old, who was in the front rank of the little group about him, and Mr. Arkin hopped blithely into the drivers's seat of Mr. Anderson's car and said he would do it.

Everything went all right until they got to the corner where the police station stands, and there Mr. Arkin swerved boldly over to the left to draw up in front of the building. This maneuver caught Leo Erb, of 218 Seventy-fourth Street, Brooklyn, who was crossing Eighty-sixth Street and not expecting traffic from that direction, completely unaware and he was knocked down.

Mr. Arkin kept straight on for the police station, but failed to stop when he reached it. Crossing the driveway between the police station and the Dyker Motion Picture Theater, he crashed into a car owned by Joseph Hartig, of 969 Seventy-fifth Street, Brooklyn, which was parked in front the theater.

Arms Equality Price Of Peace, Says Goering

Nazis Cheer Warning 'We Didn't Quit League To Be Dictated To By It'

While Chancellor Adolf Hitler retired on Feb. 9 to his mountain home in the Bavarian Alps near Berchtesgaden to ponder the reply that the German government should make to the Anglo-French proposal for an air Locarno, General Hermann Wilhelm Goering, Prussian Premier, demanded in a characteristic speech at Dresden on the same night that the Reich insist on full arms equality with the other powers in any sort of agreement.

"We did not leave Geneva to permit ourselves to be dictated to again by Geneva," he told his audience of 25,000 cheering Nazis, according to John Elliott in the New York Herald Tribune.

Goering's speech was the first of several he is scheduled to make in the next few days in provincial cities allegedly to help the winter relief campaign but really, it is suspected generally, to prepare the Nazi masses for the pending decision of the Hitler government on the London proposal.

Goebbels Also Stumping Country

This belief is strengthened by the fact that Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda and Public Enlightenment, and the ablest Nazi spellbinder next to Der Reichsfuehrer himself, is making a similar speaking tour in western Germany. Although Goebbels spoke on foreign affairs at Muenster last night, the German press was permitted to give but a brief and noncommittal account of his address.

Goering in his Dresden speech, asserted that as a result of Hitler's policy Germnay "is no longer a nation of the second rank."

"How was it a few years ago?" he continued. "Then nobody asked the opinion of the German government. We were always just an anvil upon which others hammered. This state of affairs is over for good.

"Adolf Hitler is rightly called the 'Peace Chancellor.' He has truly done more for peace than any one else. When he demands Germnay's equality he does it to maintain peace. Never is peace more imperilled than by impotency; a nation which is powerless to defend itself is a nation at the mercy of the arbitrary will of neighbor states. It is an old truth that has stood since the drawn of humanity that when the sword is lost peace is lost.

Peace and Security

"It was perhaps the most terrible and shameful of all the deeds of all the past German governments that the German people were disarmed, not only technically but morally and spiritually, for they sought to kill the self-defense of the nation. We want peace, but the world must know that we are strong enough to maintain it ourselves. We are ready to do everything to safeguard European peace, but first comes the peace of our own people.

"With peace goes security, by land, water and air. Germany loves peace, Germany needs peace, and therefore Germany, whatever comes, will maintain peace herself on the basis of complete equality in every respect.

"The German people have become free again and may once more carry their heads high. Our leaders have led Germany back to its place and the world must see that it is not possible to hold a nation of 65,000,000 liberty-loving souls everlastingly in tutelage."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Where Canadians Look North To United States

The Detroit River, flowing from Lake St. Clair to Lake Erie, is the International Boundary of the United States and Canada at that point, following a westerly and southerly course between the two lakes. On the south bank of the river is Windsor, Canada, whose citizens must look north across the river to the suburbs of Detroit to see the United States. There are a few other curious crooks of the boundary that would make this condition possible, but none where a large Canadian city is directly south of the line. However more than half the people of Canada live south of the United States because the northernmost boundary is latitude 49 degrees and the great majority of Canadians live south of that line.

Wine Steward Who Took A Drink

Walter Madigan, wine steward of the Gotham Hotel in New York, spends 12 hours a day surrounded by all varieties of tempting wines and liquors, yet he never take a drink. In fact, he has never swallowed a drop of alcoholic beverage in his life. He does his tasting and testing of liquors by merely nosing them or rolling a few drops on his tongue. Madigan's aversion to dring was caused during his childhood when he witnessed the pathetic spectacle of too much drink.

Nye Tells Women Plan To End Wars

Senator Says Curb On Munitions At Home Will Do Much Toward World Peace

International agreements limiting and controlling the traffic in arms are desirable but by no means essential to immediate and independent action by the United States to take the profit out of war in America, Senator Nye, chairman of the Special Munitions Investigating Committee, told the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War in Washington recently. He addressed more than 1,000 women from all parts of the country.

"We can take the profit out of war so far as we are concerned without dependence on what the rest of the world may do," Mr. Nye said, according to the New York Times. "If we really want international agreement upon the subject of lessening the danger of more war, we will do well first to put our house in order."

Asserting that "there is so much to be done to regulate the traffic from a domestic standpoint that the only consolation the munitions people are getting today is the thought that solution will be left to international agreement," Mr. Nye raised applause with a suggestion that one step toward the desired end would be establishment of a Federal "peace department."

He reminded the delegates that "the greatest experiment in arms control the world has ever known" was the "attempt" to keep Germany and Austria unarmed, and remarked that "this effort was thwarted first because of the influence of the British munitions makers with the British Government on one hand and the German explosive companies on the other."

Discussion of "New Dangers of War" in Europe and the Far East, with special "interrogation luncheon" sessions on Germany, Japan and Russia, occupied the delegates up to 3 p.m. when the major question became one of transportation to the White House, to attend a tea given by Mrs. Roosevelt in honor of the delegates.

Buses arrived, however, and 750 women were taken to the White House, where Mrs. Roosevelt greeted the delegates as follows:

"I am very happy to have you all here today. My husband regrets that he could not get away to meet you, and hopes that he will have the pleasure next year. He asked me to tell you that your presence here this week has helped him a great deal."

The liveliest discussion of the day took place in the "interrogation luncheon" session on Japan, during which Dr. Parker D. Moon of Columbia University, in a review of the Manchurian situation, urged joining the League of Nations.

Although the League had admittedly been "ineffective" in Manchuria, Dr. Moon maintained that it had been "astonishingly successful in fixng the blame on Japan."

Leacock Is Sure Of U.S.-Canada Commerce Pact

Predicts Reciprocal Treaty Will Be Adopted Soon, In N.Y. Interview

Dr. Stephen B. Leacock, head of the department of political science and economics at McGill University and a close friend of Prime Minister Richard B. Bennett, of Canada, said on Feb. 9 in an interview at the Biltmore Hotel, New York, that he believed a trade agreement between the United States and Canada was assured. He predicted it would be completed within six months.

The elderly Canadian, a mixture of economist and gentle humorist, spoke later in the evening at the annual banquet of the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Banking, at the Waldorf-Astoria where he delighted more than 1,000 persons with an ironical talk about the possibilities of another war.

Regarding a reciprocal trade agreement, Dr. Leacock, who took the stump in Quebec in 1911 to war on a proposed agreement at that time, said the Canadian objections of the past seventy-nine years have been overcome. Prime Minister Bennett, he said, favored the plan and had agreed to accept the offer of Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, to negotiate a treaty in Washington on March 18.

"There is every indication," he said, "that Mr. Bennett's government will be able to make a reciprocal trade agreement with the United States, where others have tried in vain since the old agreement ran out in 1866. Mr. Bennett is fortunate in being able to approach the question on its own merits, not as a partisan question and without the difficulties that used to surround it. Reciprocity was no sooner proposed in 1891 and 1911 than it raised fierce controversy in Canada about the possibilities of annexation to the United States. Sir Wilfred Laurier's government was shipwrecked on that rock and his official career ended.

"Since then times have changed. Mr. Bennett will be able to do, as a purely trade measure with great advantages to both sides of the border, what his predecessors, both conservative and liberal, failed to accomplish because of political issues."

Secretary Hull announced on January 21 that the United States intended to negotiate a reciprocal trade agreement with Canada. Dr. Leacock said it was the first move made by this government along those lines since Canada, at the polls in 1911, voted against the Underwood tariff which offered a large measure of reciprocity. The agreement, he said, Prime Minister Bennett intended to make a part of his New Deal program, which includes social reform legislation, minimum wages and a forty-eight hour maximum week.

Dr. Leacock's talk to the bankers was in answer to his own question. "How soon can we start the next war?"

"I think the prospect is good for starting it some time this spring," he told them in the humorous manner which has characterized many of his books. "But I don't want to be too optimistic. We might not get it until the autumn. But let me tell you that when it comes the United States and Canada will have no right to claim any of the credit. Why we don't even deserve to have a war! We haven't done our part.

"Have we got a corridor to fight about? No! I got our government to write your government and ask how about a corridor to the Hudson Bay. And Mr. Roosevelt was too busy to answer. We did get a letter from one of your departments. They told us they didn't know where Hudson Bay was, but they would like a corridor just the same.

"But there isn't one and there's nothing else to fight about. It would serve us both good and right if Europe didn't even let us get in the war."

Sees War Watched by Radio

He visioned the next war as coming in a day when the radio would bring the report of battles right into the home. And in predicting what that would be like, he made up a skit about a radio report of the Battle of Hastings, broadcast "through the courtesy of the Normandy Battleaxe Company, the manufacturers of the old home battleaxes."

J. Vincent O'Neill, president of the chapter, was chairman. Among those who attended were: Charles F. Ellery, president of the American Institute of Banking; George V. McLaughlin, president of the Brooklyn Trust Company; Orrie F. Kelly, president of the Lawyers County Trust Company; Jackson E. Reynolds, president of the First National Bank; J. Stewart Baker, chairman of the board of the Bank of Manhattan Company, Gordon S. Rentschler, president of the National City Bank; H. Donald Campbell, president of the Chase National Bank; Harry E. Ward, president of the Irving Trust Company; John C. Traphagen, president of the Bank of New York and Trust Company; Mortimer N. Buckner, chairman of the board of the New York Trust Company.

Also A. B. Westervelt, president of the Harlem Savings Bank; Henry Bruere, president of the Bowery Saving Bank; Philip A. Benson, president of the Dime Savings Bank; Walter E. Frew, chairman of the board of the Corn Exchange Bank Trust Company; Frank K. Houston, president of the Chemical Bank and Trust Company, and the Rev. Edward A. Hayes director of the division of finance of the Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York.

Spectators Startled By Reynolds Gold Opinion

It seems impossible to overestimate the result of what has been done here today."

Here he spoke of the Constitution, adding that it did not seem "too much to say that it is gone."

Says Guarantees Are Swept Away

"The guarantees to which men and women heretofore have looked to protect their interests have been swept away," Justice McReynolds continued. "The powers of Congress have been enlarged, and we stand as a people today stripped of the very fundamentals."

He declared that the picture was not overdrawn, and that in the days to come when "the panorama was unfolded" the truth would be seen.

"The people expected these gold clauses to protect them against a debased currency," he exclaimed. "A debased currency is nothing new. Nero undertook to exercise that power. Six centuries ago in France it was regarded as a prerogative of the sovereign.

"Soon on the strength of these obligations, hundreds of millions of dollars were loaned to the great corporations of the country. Bonds were sold to men, women and children throughout the world."

But Congress, Justice McReynolds said, "may sweep away" the gold clauses "with a world, and in the face of the facts, declare it against public policy."

Solemn Promise of Congress Seen

Discussing Liberty Bonds, he said that Congress "executed a solemn bond" to pay in gold,

"Billions and billions of dollars of these bonds were issued by this government with that solemn contract," he continued. "During the World War men stood on the street corners and said these bonds were the finest in the world, with the solemn promise of the government back of them. They told the people their country was in danger."

But in April, 1933, it had been decreed that all gold should come into the Treasury, and that there should be issued for that gold "any kind of money."

"For every dollar of gold we issued a depreciated currency," the justice declared.

He remarked that Congress had given to the President the right to depreciate the gold content of the dollar up to 50 per cent. Congress, he continued, saw necessary to pass a law "to destroy every one of these contracts for the payment of obligations in gold."

Relating the steps taken in the currency program, he said:

"That's the state to which our government has come."

"This is not a thing I like to talk about," he remarked later. "God knows I wish I didn't have to. But here are some responsibilities attaching to a man on this bench to reveal to the bar, in all its nakedness, just what has been done.

"In one breath it is said that Congress has no power to repudiate a government obligation. In the next breath, it is said, it is true you have but 60 cents and you were promised a dollar, but Congress has made it unlawful for you to accept what you contracted for. Since it is unlawful for you to accept what you contracted for, you have not been damaged.

"That Treasury says, 'Here is the depreciated dollar. You must accept it for your contract.' The Treasury of a great nation says, 'Take this depreciated dollar. Congress made it unlawful for you to accept what is due you.' And since it is unlawful there is no damage."

Justice McReynolds remarked that he and the minority refused to use "mere generalities or a multitude of words to distract the mind" from the issues involved.

"No one denies that Congress has the right to adopt a monetary system, but it does not follow that it can adopt any monetary system," he continued.

It was not intended to give Congress power, under the law, to repudiate the obligations in question, he held.

Almost a Wicked System

"Here we have a monetary system—the extent, I almost said the wickedness—of which if almost beyond comprehension," the justice continued." First, we give the President power to depreciate the dollar to 50 cents. Next, we destroy all these private obligations by statute. Not only private obligations but government obligations as well.

"And so, having put out $500,000,000 of gold clause bonds in May, Congress in July says all these contracts or promises to pay in gold are contrary to public policy. Having undertaken to destroy these gold clauses, the dollar is depreciated to 60 cents. Prices of commodities can now be estimated in the deflated dollar, and now instead of a dollar we have 60 cents.

"All mortgages of the railroads and the great corporations, all bank deposits, all insurance funds, everything the thrift of man has accumulated toward his old age is subject to this depreciation.

No Such Power Granted, He Says

"No such power was ever granted by the framers of the Constitution. It was not there then. It was not there yesterday. It is not there today. We are confronted with a condition in which the dollar may be reduced to 50 cents today, 30 cents tomorrow, 10 cents the next day and 1 cent the day after.

"We are told that the government has made out of this transaction the royal sum of $2,800,000,000, which now reposes in the Treasury."

On that basis, Mr. McReynolds said, "you could depreciate the dollar to 10 cents or 5 cents and that would give you abundant capital to pay off the public debt and discharge the private obligations as well."

"That never was the law and it ought never to be the law," he declared.

America Praises Boy Scouts On Silver Jubilee

Messages From High Government Officials Flood Headquarters

Hundreds of congratulatory telegrams and letters reached the national headquarters of the Boy Scouts of America at 2 Park Avenue, New York City, on Feb. 9 from public officials throughout the United States, including Vice-President John N. Garner, several members of the Cabinet, Governors, members of Congress and others, in connection with observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Scout organization.

Vice-President Garner wrote: "I have great admiration for the fundamentals of the Scout movement, because I believe that development of character and training in citizenship are most essential to real manhood," George H. Dern, Secretary of War, said, in part: "The Boy Scouts have demonstrated that there is still a great field in America for clean adventure, for healthful outdoor activity and opportunities for the American boy to render enthusiastic and patriotic service for his countrymen."

Other messages were received from Cordell Hull, Secretary of State; William C. Roper, Secretary of the Interior; James A. Farley, Postmaster General, and Governors Sholtz South Dakota, Ross of Idaho, Horner of Illinois, Bridges of New Hampshire, Hoffman of New Jersey and Talmage of Georgia.

Governor Wilbur L. Cross of Connecticut wrote that the words "the child is father to the man' express "better than any others possibly could the underlying principle and the great objective of the Boy Scout movement."

1,000 Attend Mass

Nearly a thousand Boy Scouts of the Catholic faith attended a 9 o'clock communion mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral as part of the celebration. The Right Rev. Monsignor Michael J. Lavelle, rector of the cathedral and Vicar General of the Archdiocese of New York, in his sermon extolled the principles of the Boy Scouts as essential Christian virtues.

"You must be courteous and kindly,' Monsignor Lavelle told the Scouts, "so that you may be a comfort and a jewel in your own homes, and free from cruelty to human beings, animals and yourselves.

"You must have loyalty to your church, to the Lord, to the law of the land, to your fathers and mothers and to your teachers."

Boys from every country in the Catholic Archdiocese of New York attended the mass, which was held under the auspices of the archdiocesan committee of the National Committee on Scouting in the Catholic Church. At the beginning of the service the Rev. Edward Roberts Moore, director of the National Committee on Scouting in the Catholic Church, celebrant of the mass, received the Scout salute from eight Scouts stationed outside the altar rail, after which a color guard of Scouts, accompanied by a guard of honor of Sea Scouts from the Bronx, marched down the center aisle.

Scouts Rule White Plains

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Feb. 9—The government of this city was in the hands of Boy Scouts today. As part of the twenty-fifth anniversary celebration about fifty Scouts were elected by their fellows to offices in the local government for the day. Philip Piser, fifteen years old, was elected Mayor and John de la Montagne, fourteen years old, Commissioner of Public Safety.

The Scouts were allowed to sit in the offices with the executives and watch them handle the day's business, but were not allowed to give the orders as in the past.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Where Dogs Have No Fleas

An unusual study in natural history was made by a scientific-minded tourist in Oliver, British Columbia, last summer proving that dogs in that town never have fleas. Thoroughbreds, mongrels, and house pets were all submitted to careful inspection but not a flea could be found. Flea-ridden dogs from coast cities were found to be clean almost immediately when brought to Oliver. The exact reason for this locality being a "dog's paradise" is not known, but it is supposed that peculiar dry climatic condition kill fleas within a few hours.

102-Yard Punt

A truly remarkable punt was recorded on November 3, 1934, in the second quarter of the Iowa-Indiana game at Gloomington, Indiana, when Dick Crayne, Iowa fullback, kicked the ball 102 yards. The ball was put in play on the Iowa 3-yard line, Dick kicked from 10 yards behind the line of scrimmage, and the ball went out of bounds on Indiana's 5-yard line. The wind, estimated at 35 miles per hour, was at Dick's back when he kicked.

Cut Of Rubber Quota Favored In London

LONDON, March 19—A sentiment of extreme dissatisfaction prevails among shareholders and Mincing Lane circles today as a result of the recent relapse of rubber which has now almost returned to the pre-restriction level after nine months of control.

Some brokers are of the opinion that the only way to bring about a price recovery is to cut the quotas by 35 per cent. The press is unanimous in stating that rubber is too low but urges the shareholders not to lose patience. However, numerous rubber dealers criticize the international restriction committee's policy as unduly moderate.

The pepper difficulties, the collapse of cotton, the fall of sterling, and finally the American situation are believed to explain the present weakness of rubber. The international committee is watching the American situation most carefully and is likely, if its fears regarding a falling off in consumption prove correct, to revise its recent decisions.

Social and Personal Notes

Mrs. James S. Russell, photographed at the home of Mrs. Rudolph Bolling Teusler at Ichome, Tsukiji, which was the home of the American Embassy when Mrs. Russell was social hostess for her cousin, Mr. Cameron Forbes, then American Ambassador to Japan.

Tokyo society this week is welcoming "home" one of the most popular hostesses in capital's history, Mrs. James S. Russell who entertained in 1930 and 1931 when her cousin, Mr. Cameron Forbes was the American Ambassador.

Mns. Russell and her niece, Miss Elsie Perkins of Boston, are house guests of Mrs. Rudolph Bolling Teusler whose charming home in Tsukiji was the American Embassy at that time while the present Embassy building was being completed.

Mrs. Russell, who arrived Thursday evening on the N.Y.K. liner Chichibu Maru, said this morning that she was "very glad to get back to Tokyo which is very much like home" to her. She loves Japan and all the people and all the things in Japan and her love of Japan, judging from the ring of sincerity in her tone, is deep rooted and genuine.

This is her second trip back. She was here two years ago with another relative, Bishop Perry, presiding bishop of the Episcopal church, and at that time she remained from March to June.

Mrs. Russell's days are now crowded with meeting old friends. She was the guest of honor at a luncheon at the Rumanian legation Friday noon and Friday evening Mrs. St. John gave a dinner in her honor.

Mrs. T. D. Walser entertained for her at a luncheon this noon and this evening she is to be the guest at a dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Hitch Jr.

Among the coming entertainments in Mrs. Russell's honor are a tea Sunday at the home of Mrs. David Tait and a dinner at the home of Mrs. William Parkinson. Monday noon, Mrs. Charles Reifsnider is entertaining and that evening, Mrs. Teusler will be hostess at a large buffet supper. Tuesday a luncheon is to be given at the Canadian legation and that afternoon, Mrs. B. W. Fleisher will give a large reception for Mrs. Russell. Miss Perkins will go to Nikko Tuesday with Mrs. David Tait.

Mrs. Russell is leaving next week to visit her son and daughter in China following which she will return to join the American Garden party touring Japan. This summer Mrs. Russell will have a home in Karuizawa where she will have as her house guests, her son, John F. Russell, and her daughter, Mrs. Eric Nyholm from China, Dr. and Mrs. Hubbard of St. Luke's Hospital, and her son, Robert, who is graduating from Harvard University this spring and who will sail for Japan immediately after commencement exercises. In addition, Mr. Forbes is expected to be in Japan in April as the leader of the American Trade Mission.

The first group of priests, numbering 13 arrived Tuesday and a second group of 20 are expected shortly. Both parties are from the Yunokawa monaster in Hokkaido.

Currency Is Safe Under Roosevelt, Says Richberg

funds safely.

He stoutly defended government borrowings, asserting that several billions more could be borrowed without impairing the nation's credit, and declared that if the government "could borrow $10,000,000,000 for a destructive war it can borrow a few more billions to rebuild the nation."

Calls on Financiers to Aid

He predicted recovery would "speed up immeasurably if those financiers and industrialists who are able to start things would go ahead instead of grousing."

Mr. Richberg, answering another question, said there was need of a disciplined industry to offset the evils of industrial mechanization and unrestrained competition.

He admitted "the need of honest criticism of any administration under our democratic system," but criticized "those Senators who vote against their honest convictions simply to embarrass the administration" as "cheap politicians."

He characterized company unions as "contemptible when organized to defeat lawful unions," but vigorously defended the right of any group of workers to choose their own representatives in labor controversies.

He minimized the effect of the recent decision in the Weirton Steel Company case against Section 7 a by declaring that eight-one per cent of legal opinions from the Supreme Court down had upheld the right of organization and collective bargaining.

Mr. Richberg parried a question concerning wheat was being done by the government nationally and internationally concerning its monetary policies by replying:

"It would be improper for me to answer that."

Approves Pension in Theory

When the Townsend plan was broached by a questioner, Mr. Richberg said that the theory was praistworthy, but added:

"It is peculiar the ideas some people have concerning how the government does not get it like you get apples out of a barrel. It has to come from somewhere. Now if everybody over 60 is to get $200 a month you can be certain it is going to come out of the pockets of everybody between 18 and 60.

When those under 60 have arrived at the unselfish attitude where they are ready to dig down in their pockets to pay everybody over 60 the sum of $200 a month, then there will have been a tremendous spread of real Christianity. But the government cannot get the money out of the thin air."

In his formal address, which consumed an hour, Mr. Richberg outlined broadly the objectives of the NRA and quoted figures to support his contention that it had succeeded and was succeeding. He asserted that the "courageous fighting leadership" of President Roosevelt was the dominant factor in the nation's recovery from depression.

Obviously referring to former President Hoover's advocation of a return to the gold standard.

Mr. Richberg defended the Roosevelt monetary policy as follows:

"It would be an obvious omission for me to leave a review of two years of progress under the administration of President Roosevelt with no reference at all to those monetary policies which have undoubtedly played so large a part in making possible our economic recovery and in relieving our people of an intolerable burden of unjust debts which chained us to the evils of deflation. But this is a subject of which I do not presume to have any intimate knowledge or to voice any authoritative opinions.

"Conflict in Currency Views"

"There are many views of learned men which are in hopeless conflict over what is a sound currency and how it can be established and maintained. Nevertheless men of ordinary and extraordinary wisdom will probably agree that a dollar of substantially stable purchasing power should be the basis of any sound currency in these United States. To incur a debt and to extend a credit is intended as a transfer of purchasing power, coupled with a promise to pay for its use and to return eventually that which has been transferred.

"The gold standard, long used as a measure of value, has failed to serve faihfully the needs of domestic and international exchange. Instead of a dollar of constant purchasing power, we have found ourselves burdened with a dollar of widely fluctuating value. Even a recent statement advocating a return to the gold standard acknowledged the need and benefit of a devaluation of the dollar to relieve debtors of the unjust requirement that they pay back 50 per cent more purchasing power than they had borrowed.

"The wholesale reduction of an excessive burden of debt was a necessity when the inflationary period preceding 1930 was followed by the drastic deflation of the depression. Under the monetary policies of the present administration two objectives have been clear and have been steadily maintained.

"First, to establish a fair relationship between creditors and debtors through a sound currency based on an honest dollar, which is neither a cruelly deflationary dollar, nor a depreciating and wildly inflationary one. Second, to maintain, as the basis of that sound curency, a dollar of stable purchasing power.

"The advocates of a monetary policy, whereby the price and wage structure can be violently disturbed by the actions of other nations, by a concentrated control of credit in private hands, by the operations of speculators, by the shifting relationship of the supply of one precious metal to a widely fluctuating demand for currency, are not advocating a sound currency. They say that investments will not be made when there is uncertainty as to the value in which they will be repaid; and yet in the same breath they advocate a currency based on a dollar of ever fluctuating and uncertain value.

"Again let it be noted that the monetary policies of the administration have been justified by their results. They have played a constructive part not only in the relief of financial pressures that weighed down the masses of the people, but also in the permanent reconstruction of our economic system. Old prejudices and fears with their hampering restraints are disappearing, and new measures for the protection and advancement of the general welfare are gaining public confidence. Even the love of gold is losing its hold upon popular imagination.

"Perhaps it will be written in history that in this inspiration of a great and powerful nation to cast aside outworn precedents and to disregard superstitious fears of change, was rendered the greatest service of our President to his generation.

"The traditional principles and purposes of our democracy have been jealously maintained. The spirit and idealism of our institutions of self-government have been steadfastly upheld. But in the choice of way and means with which to fulfill the promise of American life there has been a boldness, a defiance of precedent, a willingness to risk failure in great adventures for the common good, which has raised politics to statecraft and offered to a distressed people the priceless gift of true, unselfish leadership."

In an attack on the critics of the President, Mr. Richberg said:

"Just for today let us lay aside the fault-finding and quibbling of political opposition. Let us turn a deaf ear to the croaking theorist, the fanatic and the perfectionist who are never satisfied with any practical human achievement. Just for today let us talk about what has been done, instead of about what somebody thinks might have been done. Let us have an armistice in the endless debate over causes and cures for the depression, and turn our eyes on a record of facts—a record of actual accomplishment. Just for today let us, as a grateful people, give credit to our President and to ourselves for the great deeds of these two years, crowded with inspiring, life-giving action for the advancement of the common good.

"How is it possible to sum up in a few words the achievements of the government in the last two years in the relief of industrial unemployment, agricultural distress and widespread destitution? Any well informed man would require volumes to explain merely the workings of all the organizations casually described as 'alphabetical agencies.' Only a hostile politician, brilliantly equipped with misinformation, prejudice and ignorance, would think that he could analyze the accomplishments and shortcomings of the entire program in a few thousand words. I shall not attempt to rival such an exhibition with any sweeping summary of efforts and performance.

"Let me merely ask you to compare for yourselves the conditions of today with those of March 3, 1933. I do not ask you to pore over tables and charts and reports until your eyes are blurred, your head throbs and you feel as sick as Job tormented by boils and economic advisers. I do not even urge you to listen to speeches such as this one, unless you feel that you need an antidote for some of the demagogy and hokum that are being poured into your ears over the radio and through other channels of public misinformation."

Wilmington Citizens To Pay 3 Income Taxes

Governor C. Douglass Buck of Delaware signed the bill authorizing the New Castle County Commissioners to levy an income tax for the next two years to finance the county's relief program. The county includes Wilmington.

The governor signed the measure after receiving an opinion from the State Supreme Court that it is not in conflict with the Constitution, says the New York Times.

The measure means that residents of the county will have three income taxes to pay during the next two years, one to the Federal Government, one to the State and one to the county. The county revenue in expected to be $600,000 to $750,000 a year.

Residents of New York also will pay three incomes taxes unless the city levy is repealed before March 15, which seems unlikely.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

God's Mercy Store

In the little town of Waller, Texas, there is a store called "God's Mercy Store" where no article is priced and patrons are permitted to pay any amount they wish above the actual cost of the goods. The customer is told the cost, he figures overhead expenses himself, and pays what he thinks is a fair price. The proprietor started in business several years ago doing all his own work, but in a few years his unusual establishment has grown to such an extent that he now employs about a dozen assistants.

The Democratic Rooster

The rightful official emblem of the Democratic Party is a rooster. Its originator was Joseph Chapman of Greenfield, Hancock County, Indiana, who was politically active in the Presidential Campaign of 1840. Chapman's stump speaking was referred to as "crowing" by his Whig opponents, with the result that the Democrats told Chapman to keep "crowing", and the rooster chief crower in nature, was adopted as the official Democratic emblem. The better known Democratic donkey, as well as the elephant of the Republicans, is merely a newspaper expedient, introduced by the famous Thomas Nast who is also responsible for the Tiger label of Tammany Hall.

The Poetic Husband

Wilhelm Baron von Humboldt (1767-1835) one of the most enlightened Prussians of his age, married the clever and intellectual Karoline von Dachrodern in 1791. The couple was inordinately fond of the another. From the day of his marriage, the Baron composed a poem of 100 lines every evening, which he would present to his wife in the morning. The Baroness died in 1829 and her husband survived her for 6 years. And for the entire 6 years, von Humboldt continued to compose a poem of 100 lines in honor of his dead wife every evening, to carry and deposit it in the morning on her grave at Tegel, near Berlin. Von Humboldt was the Ambassador of Prussia in many foreign capitals, and was also a distinguished scholar and poet.

Lithuania Guards Memel; Places Troops At Borders

5 Regiments And 1,000 Riflemen Posted To Avert Nazi Rising

Five regiments of Lithuanian troops were posted at strategic border points, with 1,000 riflemen stationed in Memel itself today to guard what, following the Saar settlement, has become the worst point of friction between German racialism and the interests of neighboring States, says Otto D. Tolischus in a despatch from Memel to the New York Times dated Feb 28.

The article continues:

While the National Socialist doctrine of the essential racial unity of all Germany, irrespective of State borders, is having a wedge-like effect on all States with German minorities, the ultimate implications of the doctrine are being pressed with special emphasis for the moment against Lithuania for several reasons.

The most important of these reasons is that Nazi racialism has been temporarily checkmated everywhere, including Austria, and, since the German-Polish pact, even in the Polish Corridor. Therefore the Baltic "midget" States seem at present to be the only more or less safe outlets for the racial urge.

In this Germantic eastward drive, Danzig already has been "coordinated." There are even rumors that the Poles are ready to agree to its complete return to Germany for an unspecified compensation. This makes the former German Memel territory the next logical objective in the German effort to organize an "Eastern European front." And since racially the Germans are in a minority in Memel territory, the doctrine of racial unity has been expanded to include regions under predominantly German cultural influence, as Memel undoubtedly is.

This drive has been carried on by propaganda, financial penetration, economic strangulation and, until recently, even outright terrorism. In testimony in the trial of 126 Memel Nazis at Kovno, German consular officials at Memel were accused having taken a leading part in an alleged coup plot.

The revival of Germanism in the Baltic region, where Germans have constituted the ruling class for centuries, has precipitated all sorts of complicated racial, class and economic issues. The Germans, having back of them 65,000,000 people, have the advantage. But there has also been revived the instinct for survival on the part of the new Baltic States, who have embarked on a campaign to eradicate Germanism through more or less forced assimilation, even to the point of enforced change in German names.

Lithuania Is Handicapped

In their counter-measure in the crucial Memel territory, however, the Lithuanian authorities have been handicapped. In the first place, the provisions of the democratic Memel Autonomy Convention are guaranteed by the big European powers. Second, the Lithuanians have been hampered by their own mistakes, due in part at least to the growing pains of a newly constituted State.

Be that as it may, however, in a talk with this correspondent, Dr. Jonas Havakas, Governor of Memel territory, made it plain that Lihuania was determined to fight to her last man any attempt to detach Memel territory from her. The five regiments referred to are only her "advance guard."

"I do not believe there will be any such attempt," declared Dr. Navakas, smiling, "but we are taking no chances. Precautions won't hurt.

"Although parties hostile to the state are forbidden and National Socialist organizations have been smashed since the arrest of 126 men now on trial, nevertheless intermittent attempts to reorganize are still going on. Only recently we have discovered and put an end to an effort to organize Youth Lcague members, clad in uniform dress imitating the black German S. S. uniforms, who devoted themselves to semi-military maneuvers, map-drawing, &c."

Here Governor Naxakas showed your correspondent confiscated pictures of a uniformed Youth League group and confiscated maps, drawn according to a military manual.

"Yes," he continued, "we are keeping an eye on all that is going on. We are well prepared to suppress either an attempted uprising here or an invasion from across the border."

Terms Atrocity Tales "Nonsense"

Asked about atrocity stories appearing in the German press, charging maltreatment of Memel residents by Lithuanian police, Dr. Navakas replied: "Nonsense. Nobody is molested who does not actively oppose the State."

As to the Memel Convention, which the Germans charge is being violated and which they appeal to the guaranteeing powers to enforce, Dr. Navakas said:

"We are observing the convention as far as possible, but it must be realized that its functioning is made difficult by the fact that the convention is constantly being violated by the other side, which boasts it will annihilate democracy by democracy's own methods.

"The signatory powers are fully informed, both by the testimony at the Kovno trial and through diplomatic channels. Therefore we do not expect intervention. Beyond that, however, if the drive on Memel continues and if Germany makes Memel an international issue, then we may have to do the same: appeal to the League of Nations, irrespective of the question of prestige involved.

"An example of what has been going on is the fact in one year 1,900,000 litas (about $188,000) have been shipped in here from across the border to merely pay for hostile party organization, which is sufficient to make every party worker a highly paid salaried official."

"We want peace," said Dr. Navakas in conclusion. "That is the reason our government is anxious for the conclusion of an Eastern pact, which should eliminate any border disputes."

Filipino Sailors Not Wanted By U.S. Union

American Body Demands Their Discharge

All Filipino sailors employed on American ships may be thrown out of their jobs under a plan put into effect on March 13 by the American Sailors' Union, states a United Press report from New York.

Mr. Otis Shepard, head of the steamship company which bears his name, said that he was forced to agree to discharge Filipino crews from four ships before sailors and union longshoremen would unload the freighter Windrush at Seattle.

"It is a damnable outrage," Mr. Otis declared. "The Filipinos are excellent and faithful seamen. Our ships have used Filipino seamen for years.

"We attempted to compromise with the Sailors' Union by having the Filipinos join the union, but the unions would not permit them to join."

It is estimated that some fifteen inter-coastal vessels employ some 300 Filipino sailors, all of whom will probably be discharged if the union continues its demand that only American citizens and members of the union be employed on ships flying the flag of the United States.

Tankers Still Tied Up

Meanwhile, the possibility of a general sailors' strike was advanced in San Pedro, where eight tankers of the Union Oil Co. are still tied up by a sailors' strike.

Radiomen, Masters and Engineers Unions have announced they will not ship any vessel out of port on which non-union seamen are employed.

Employers are maintaining a discreet silence on the matter, but some quarters predict that strike-breaking measures may be resorted to by the shipping companies if the strike becomes general.

Union leaders say that any strike-breaking efforts would precipitate a general walkout by all union seamen employed on American freighters.

Saito Defines Japan's Asia Policy At Chicago

larger part of the system of railways and the roads for horse and motor vehicles. It was our merchants who had developed the important industry of soya beans. It was our steamship lines that conveyed the crops of Manchuria to foreign ports all over the world. It was the presence of a small force of our troops in Manchuria that insured such peace as existed there.

It was the Japanese, in short, whose enterprise had made possible the welfare of the Chinese of the territory who had deserted their own provinces by the millions to migrate to the land of the Manchus. The agitation to drive us out was unquestionably unjust. It resulted as the world has seen. Our small force of troops turned suddenly upon the enormous army created by the former Chinese bandit who had made himself governor, and drove them out. We then assisted the civil elments in the population to organize a responsible government with the rightful descendant of the Manchu dynasty at its head.

Whatever the rest of the world may say about this movement, the people of Japan believe they have performed a rightful mission. They believe they have not only made their own national and material position better but have improved the lot of the thirty millions of Manchu and Chinese people who live in the new state of Manchoukuo. The difference in the conditions of the Chinese living there now from what it was under the administration of the former Chinese war lord is conspicuous. There are still bandits in the country, but they are steadily being hunted down, and law and order prevail there as never before.

An evidence of this is to be found in the fact that the reputation of the government has spread to China proper and millions of people are still migrating from south of the Great Wall up into Manchoukuo. To their minds does not enter the question of the reigning political regime, only the question of their personal safety and advantage.

The question is also often asked whether the government of Manchoukuo is independent. No new government in that position, between China and Russia, could possibly be powerful enough at once to maintain its independence. It must be defended by Japanese troops for a certain period. Russia and China are not only two of the world's largest states; they are states with the largest standing armies in the world. The armies of Russia are nearly a million strong, while those of China, if they were united, would make a force of nearly three million men.

Says Japan Must Be Prepared

Japan has had to face in the past a series of potential menaces. Our people now ardently hope that those have come to an end. But until the condition of China is such that it no longer tempts adventurous foreign nations into the Orient, Japan must be prepared for eventualities. Happily it is not necessary for us to maintain an army the size of either the Russian or Chinese forces. The standing army of our country is only one-third the size of Russia's and not much more than a tenth of that of China.

Another question that is frequently asked is whether we ourselves do not intend to take control of China. To us Japanese that seems like asking, "Are you not likely to go mad?" Is England likely to attempt to take control of Europe? China is a territory as large as Europe with a population even greater. Let me quote the words of General Chiang Kai-shek, the head of the government of China, as recently reported by The American Associated Press correspondent at Nanking (according to "The New York Times" of February 2). "The rumor," the General said, "that China eventually will become a protectorate is childish. Those who keep close touch with Chinese and Japanese relations should know better."

Americans Too Hasty, He Says

If I may be permitted to make a criticism of the attitude of some Americans I would say that they want to see the problems of other parts of the world settled too quickly. An American friend once told me this story, which is significant. He said he was having lunch one day with another American and an old Chinese scholar. The three were discussing the possible invasion of China by the Japanese and the venerable Chinese scoffed at the idea. "If they should be so stupid," he said, "it would be their end."

"How?" one of the Americans asked.

"We would absorb them," was the answer, "as we always do the invader. It would not take long."

"How more than 300 or 400 years."

But the American, my friend said, was not satisfied. He wanted to see it done in the lifetime.

Many of the American people have been sentimental about China for some time. You have been as a nation most generous to her people. Your churches and philanthropic institutions have sent, in all, hundreds of millions of dollars to the country to help the people in different ways. The spirit inspiring this liberality is most commendable. We Japanese have not been able to bestow largess so freely; we are not so rich. But in our different way, through the necessities of action imposed upon us by conditons, we have been of practical benefit to, I believe, a great number of Chinese.

Japan Educating Chinese

For many years we have been educating thousands of their young men. For every one Chinese student who has come to the United States ten have come to Japan. It might be that they would prefer to come to the United States, but they cannot do so because of the much greater distance and higher cost. You have given hundreds of them higher education; we have taught thousands of them practical farming and other profitable industries. You have bought millions of dollars of Chinese products; we have bought much more. You have built schools for them in China proper, so have we in China and Manchuria. You have opened hospitals for them and taught them modern medicine; so have we. In front of our hospitals in Manchuria the lines of Chinese daily awaiting attention by Japanese doctors are at least as long as those in front of your hospitals awaiting attention by Americans. It seems to me a pity the good works as well as the bad of other countries are not more freely reported.

We Japanese are the near neighbors of the Chinese. We cannot be otherwise. We cannot push China away from us nor remove Japan away from the Asiatic mainland. We have always been neighbors and will always continue to be. We would be stupid people if we designed to do our neighbors injury. It is to our own best interest that the Chinese should thrive, that they should profit by intercourse with us and that they should regard us as valuable friends. This is a thought in the minds of our leading statesmen, and there can be no doubt that the best thinkers in China fully understand it.

Only a few weeks ago (January 22, 1935) Mr. Koki Hirota, Minister for Foreign Affairs of Japan, stated: "Japan attaches great importance to her friendship with the other states in east Asia and counts on their participation in bearing serious responsibilities for the maintenance of peace and order in this part of the world. I fervently hope, therefore, not only that China will soon recover her stability but that she will awaken to a realization of the whole situation of east Asia and undertake to meet the genuine aspirations of our country."

I am glad to learn that such pronouncements are favorably received by responsible Chinese authorities, and I sincerely hope that an age of co-operation will dawn upon east Asia.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Human Machine Gun

Eddie Just of Sisseton, South Dakota, lays claim to the title of the only human machine gun in the world because of his accomplishment of shooting 10 times in one second with a 22 calibre repeating rifle. Just is willing to demonstrate his quickness on the trigger at any time. To truly appreciate this feat it must be borne in mind that he uses a repeater—not an automatic—and the physical strain of reloading 10 times in one second is terrific.

CLUB WOMEN SEE KIMONO FASHIONS

Meeting at the Matsuya department store in Asakusa, members of the Tokyo Women's club saw an exhibit of fashions in Japanese dress and the dressing of a Japanese bride Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Russell Durgin who arranged the meeting, introduced Mr. Naito and Mr. Komatsu, managing directors of the Asakusa store. Mr. Naito, a graduate of Aoyama Gakuin and a former employe of the Mtsukoshi Company, was at one time connected ed with the Wannamaker and Macy department stores of New York. Since his return from America, he has been with the Matsuya department store of which his father was formerly managing director and of which his uncle is now president. He spoke briefly at the meeting.

Under the expert fingers of two professional dressers, a model was gowned as a bride, over the scarlet nagajuban or long under kimono, a stiff ribbon sash or datemaki was tightly tied to keep the undergarments in place and to make a foundation for the obi.

Another datemaki was tied over the ceremonial bridal kimono and then the beautifully brocaded obi was wound about the bride's waist and silk sash was tied over the lower part of the obi. A pocketbook with lucky charms was tucked in the upper part of the obi and then the silk head-dress, tsunokakushi, was put on, theoretically to hide the horns of jealousy.

Last of all, the elaborate uchikake or long coat-like kimono with beautiful designs, was added. This is a garment which is worn by members of wealthy families. The uchikake falls to the floor and is spread out in fan shaped manner.

The complete dress of the bride cost ¥500 although the store had some wedding ensembles costing as much as ¥1,000.

The fashion show also included the colorful costumes of children and especially costume for the shichi-go-san festivals. From the bright colored kimono of children, the costumes changed gradually to softer colors and then to the sober shades of the haori coats for 50 year old women.

After the fashion show, a flower arrangement by Mrs. Ushiyama, younger sister of the president of Matsuya, was admired and tea was served by the store management.

Birth Control Nearly Wrecks Crime Session

Issue Sent Back To Committee After Hot Debate In Trenton Conference

The New Jersey Crime Conference at the War Memorial Building ended on March 2 with the adoption of numerous resolutions and a renewal by Governor Harold G. Hoffman of his promise to ask the Governors of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware to enter into compacts with New Jersey to facilitate the capture and trial of criminals.

Resolution after resolution, framed in the sectional meetings held the day before, was adopted without debate, and then Chester I. Barnard, president of the New Jersey Bell Telephone Company and chairman of the resolutions committee, offered a resolution indorsing the establishment of birth-control clinics in congested districts, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Resolution Starts Hot Debate

"Resolved," ran the resolution, "that this conference indorse the establishment of birth control clinics where scientific contraceptive information, dispensed by specially trained physicians, be established in congested districts as a means of crime prevention and the appropriate legislation to this end be enacted."

The drowsiest of the 1,500 or more delegates woke up at once, and a hot debate centered on the resolution. The chief objections to it were that it had nothing to do with crime and was a controversial subject, any how. Its proponents asserted that the latter point was irrelevant and that birth control was a legitimate attempt to control crime at the source.

Judge Anthony Botti, of Jersey City, got up to say that he thought birth control and crime control were two quite different things, and he didn't want to see a conference capable of accomplishing so much good go off at a tangent or be split up by controversy.

"Much good work has been done here so far," said Judge Botti, "but if this resolution is passed it will spoil the conference"

Woman Defends Resolution

Mrs. William Thayer Brown jr., of Short Hills, who is vice-chairman of the New Jersey Birth Control League, replied that birth control had a great deal to do with crime control.

"All, all too many children," said Mrs. Brown, "are born to squalor and filth and all that means in degradation, destruction of morals and the breeding of crime."

May M. Carty, of Jersey City, a member of the State Board of Education, reiterated the opinion of Judge Botti. Birth control, she said, was no concern of the New Jersey Conference on Crime. Dr. J. B. Morrison, of Newark, secretary of the New Jersey Medical Society, said that the subject of birth control was one on which medical men as well as the clergy differed and his organization never had given the practice its approval. A man from Atlantic City, who introduced himself as the father of seven, proclaimed with some heat and great confidence that "the New Jersey Legislature will not interfere with the laws of God."

The discussion lasted for half an hour and became more and more animated as it progressed. Charles R. Hardin, who presided, denied several motions to adjourn and finally put the question of indorsement of birth control to a viva voce vote. The vote seemed to be about evenly divided and for a moment it looked as though the controversy would continue. Then Charles A. Peterson, state commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, solved the problem by moving to refer the resolution back to committee. This compromise motion was carried by an undoubted majority.

Damrosch To Plan N.Y. Arts School

preparatory school where pupils who are interested in music, art and drama more than in trade and sciences of the technical high schools' curricula can study along with the necessary academic subjects the things which make them happy, prepare them for the art of living, and help them to make their choice for future study and occupation.

"The function of the Municipal Art Committee is not to make any attempt at professional education but to enable more people to participate in the pleasure that artistic entertainment offers."

Other Groups Not Completed

The names of the other groups were withheld by Mrs. Breckinridge because the committees were not completed.

Mrs. Breckinridge recently sent to the members of the Municipal Art Committee a questionnaire containing thirteen suggested fields, and asking the members to signify preference for service in any three. The responses indicated that a fourteenth field, cooperation with settlement work in art and music endeavors, was needed.

Mrs. Breckinridge said she would appoint committees to work out all of the fourteen points. In addition to those for which she announced the appointment of committees yesterday are:

A study of the art needs of the city and a suggested program; temporary exhibits; children's galleries; a study of the drama needs of the city and a suggested program; dance program; music at popular prices; municipal orchestra; park music program; educational and art program for the municipal radio station; the development of a plan for permanent employment for musicians, artists and craftsmen of all types; cooperation with settlement work in art and music.

Gland Broker In NY Hailing Pituitary Boom

He Is Van Elder, Dutch Pioneer, Who Is Utilizing By-Products Of Packers

Maurice Van Gelder, dealer in ductless glands, arrived in New York from the Netherlands for his annual chat with the American meat packers who constitute his chief source of supply. At the Hotel Vanderbilt, Park Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, he was in jovial mood, for his business appears to be climbing out of the depression and on Continental markets today parathyroids are soaring and pituitary glands, in some instances, have brought in as high as $10 a pound, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

"In the last year," he continued, "our firm sold nearly 200 pounds of pituitary glands every month. As for the pancreas—that's the gland that sells—300 tons of them in one year. They're used for diabetes, you know; they supply insulin."

$100,000 a Year in Pituitaries

Mr. Van Gelder is neither a physician nor a scientist. He conducts no research. He performs no excisions. As merchant he simply buys glands—fresh, frozen, ductless glands of all varieties, from the familiar, work-a-day liver to the minute and mysterious pineal body—and then sells them to the laboratories of Europe.

With the progress of medical science Mr. Van Gelder's business has expanded until now his firm is the leading gland clearing house in the world. Forty years ago G. Van Gelder & Co., of Amsterdam, dealt only in such animal by-products as oils and fats. Then one day a chemical firm in London with whom they did business ordered a sheep thyroid post-haste. The Dutch merchants thought it an unusual consignment, but they obtained the organ as requested and rushed it across the Channel.

As years passed physiologists began to delve into the little-understood properties of hormones. More and more the house of Van Gelder had to scurry around for the thyroids of sheep and the livers of bulls. The elder Van Gelder died and his sons took over and incorporated the firm. At the present time ductless glands are the backbone of the business of N. V. Handel Maatschappij v.h. G. Van Gelder & Co., Ltd., 503 Heerengracht, Amsterdam-C. Its annual turnover in pituitaries alone amounts to $100,000.

Mr. Van Gelder anticipates a far greater demand for pituitaries in the near future, for a noted professor at the University of Amsterdam, Dr. Laquer, has conducted experiments indicating that pituitary extract is of great value in the treatment of certain forms of blindness.

Monkey Glands a "Joke"

In order to supply one pound of pituitary glands, 100 cattle must be slaughtered, while several thousands of pigs and sheep must die to yield the same amount. A few years ago Mr. Van Gelder's brother through a pound of pituitary could be obtained in one stroke from the skull of a whale. Accordingly he booked passage with one of the regular whaling expeditions which supplied oil and fat to his company and supervised the dissection of a great sperm. He obtained an enormous pituitary, a colossal pancreas and a number of other gigantic glands. Unfortunately, for some reason which the Van Gelder brothers still do not understand entirely, the extracts of whale glands prove of little or no use in the treatment of human ailments.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

World's Most Expensive Highway

With the opening of the Holland Tunnel under the Hudson River it was found that surface roads between New York City, Newark and Elizabeth, New Jersey, were hopelessly congested. To meet the unprecented highway requirements, a super-viaduct highway, with an annual capacity of 20,000,000 autos, was built from Jersey City to Elizabeth (13 miles) at a cost of more than $40,000,000. To escape drawbridges over two important rivers then highway was elevated for distance of about three miles at a cost of $7,000,000 a mile—making that short stretch the most costly highway ever built. It is known as the "Pulaski Skyway."

Striped Pigs

C. C. Anderson of Omaha, Nebraska, has two red-and-black striped pigs, with the stripes running lengthwise. Research has disclosed that this peculiar striping is caused by reversions, popularly called "throwbacks," to wild pigs. Young wild pigs sometimes have stripes but they disappear rapidly as the animal grows.

Three Records Set By Yale Swimmers

World Mark For 800-Yard Relay Lowered To 8:32.4 By 4-man Team

N. Y. Times

NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 4—Three swimming records—one world and two American—were set today by Yale relay teams in a sanctioned informal meet with the freshman natators. Captain David Livingston, Dick Cooke and Dick Wilson participated in all of the performances.

The Yale four-man team swam to a new world's record at 800 yards, covering the distance in 8:32.4 in the fifty-yard pool of the Payne Whitney gymnasium.

The old mark, 8:38.8, was created a year ago by a Yale team composed of Norris Hoyt of New Haven, Wilson of Davenport, Iowa; Livington of Hawaii, and Dick Corroon.

Corroon's place was taken today by Cooke. Livington swam his 200-yard leg in the fastest time, 2:04.2.

The six-man relay team covered the 600 yards in 5:39.4, lowering by fourteen seconds the American mark of 5:53.4, created in 1921 by the Outrigger Club of Hawaii.

The time of the first four swimmers set a new American record for the 400-yard relay in 3:43, compared to the former record of 3:51, made in 1921 by Illinois Athletic Club. Corroon and William King were the fifth and sixth swimmers in the 600-yard event.

Stomach In Chest Of Child Is Put In Place

consisted in making, first an opening into the child's chest on the left side.

Four ribs were cut and removed. Through this opening it was seen that the chest space on the left side contained not only the lung, which is normally there, but also the stomach, the small intestines, and all the large intestines, including the appendix, except for a distance of two feet, the so-called descending portion of the large intestine. The spleen was also in the chest space.

Position of Heart Shifted

Because of the presence of these abdominal organs in the chest the left lung was shriveled and collapsed and the heart was shifted in its position from the left over toward the right side.

The second phase of the operation consisted in the reduction of the hernia. This meant first, freeing the space through which the organs had entered the chest wall from the adhesions there formed. Next, the other adhesions of the small and large intestines to the lung and the heart covering were severed.

The surgeon, Dr. Philemon E. Truesdale, was now in a position to replace the displaced organs in the abdominal cavity.

The third step of the operation consisted in clearing the opening in the diaphragm of all the surrounding adhesions. The opening was then closed by stitching the edges together along its entire length.

This opening extended half through the thickness of the body, running from the center to the chest wall on the left side. The opening was five inches in length and measured three inches wide.

Th nerve which controls the motion of the left half of the diaphragm was paralyzed by the injection of alcohol. This will limit the movements of the diaphragm and should facilitate healing. This paralysis is not permanent. Its effects may last for several weeks or months.

Heart Freed of Restraint

This was an operation of necessity. With the digestive organs displaced the child was in constant danger of intestinal obstruction, and, what is more serious, of strangulation of the bowel. In addition she was continuously suffering from embarrassment of respiration, of circulation and of digestion.

By this operation, space has been made available in the left chest for the expansion and normal movement of the left lung. The heart has been freed of the bands which tied it down to the intestines, and it will now be in a position to assume its proper place. It should now be possible for the various portions of the gastro-intestinal tract to reestablish themselves in their normal relationship.

There was some question in the mind of the surgeon as to whether the abdominal space was large enough to contain all of the organs. This being a congenital type of diaphragmatic hernia, the digestive organs had been out of their normal place for years. In consequence, the abdominal space may have shrunk to such an extent that the return of the organs may crowd it. This phase of the problem can not be judged at this time. The condition of the patient and her response during the coming days will settle whether or not the abdominal organs can re-establish themselves fitttingly within the abdominal cavity.

Had to Complete Operation

Another interesting phase of the operation was that, since the appendix portion of the large intestine was located in the chest, the operation, once begun, had to be completed in what is termed one stage.

In a two-stage operation the large intestine can be operated at the site of the appendix. This opening acts as a safety valve in the case of intestinal obstruction. The patient can thus be gotten into condition for the actual reduction of the hernia and for the repair of the diaphragm hole.

Dr. Truesdale, together with other members of the American Association of Thoracic Surgery, has been a pioneer in the specialty of this branch of surgery and has contributed substantially to medicine's knowledge of the condition of diaphagmatic hernia and its treatment.

At the end of the operation Dr. Truesdale said:

"To deal with this type of deformity requires special knowledge and experience, but I would like to state that there are many other surgeons throughout the United States and Canada who are perfectly qualified to cope with all the problems found in dealing with diaphragmatic hernia."

Love For French Officer Balks Reich Woman Spy

Police quoted a beautiful blonde woman arrested as a spy at Brest, France, on March 4 that she came to that city in the service of Germany, but fell in love with a young French naval officer and refused to carry out her mission.

Denying she had betrayed French secrets, the woman, police said, according to the New York Times, that she told them in her jail cell;

"It is true I came to Brest in the service of Germany; but I fell in love with the officer whom I wished to use, and so I could not do what was asked of me. I have never sent out any information.'

The woman is Lydia Oswals, said to be of German or Swiss descent. She speaks French and English fluently.

The young officer involved held himself at the disposition of authorities. He said he would resign if necessary, but would mary the woman despite the charges against her.

Swiss Lengthen Military Service

Opposition Of Peasants Strong; Communist Tax Proposal In Geneva Swamped

The Federal law extending annual compulsory military service twenty-three days was ratified by the Swiss nation in a referendum on February 24 at Geneva by a majority of almost 75,000. Complete returns give 506,845 votes for the measure and 431,902 against. This law had been adopted last September by Parliament by a vote of 291 to 11 according to the New York Times Correspondent.

With 80 per cent of the electorate voting, which is unusually high, the huge popular vote against the law came as a disconcerting surprise to its adherents, particularly since it was only the Communist party that forced the holding of this referendum. The Socialist party congress decided after the petition was circulated to support the Communists in opposing the prolonged military term, but only by a vote of 342 to 212. Many Socialists, including the Mayor of Zurich, came out publicly, however, in favor of the law as a necessary step to defend the Swiss democracy against the Nazi and Fascist danger. All other political parties campaigned strongly in favor of the law as a patriotic measure.

Hostility To Law Surprises

Popular hostility to the law, however, was far greater than the normal Socialist vote to say nothing of the Communist electorate which cuts a very minor figure in Switzerland.

The Communist proposal for amending the tax law in this canton was defeated today 31,625 to 1,889 which indicates the normal Communist strength. Oppositon was particularly strong among the peasants. This is taken by some observers to reflect their economic discontent, particularly their growing indebtedness under Switzerland's gold policy.

This referendum may well cause repercussions to Switzerland's economic and financial policies, the more so since Edmund Schulthess, who for twenty-two years had been chief of the Federal Department of Public Economy, resigned Feb. 13 and his place remains open. His deflation policies had been receiving increasing criticism.

Opposition to the new military law was particularly strong in the normally non-Marxist farm lands of Central Switzerland. Two of the three original Swiss cantons rejected the law and the third carried it by only a small margin. Schwyz Canton, which gave Switzerland its name and has remained a patriotic centre, rejected the law by 8,122 to 4,810.

Along the German frontier Zurich, where the Socialists are in control, gave the law its biggest majority, voting for it 91,000 to 65,000. The city canton of Basle, which is also on the frontier, voted for the measure, 22,000 to 16,000, while the rural canton of Basle rejected the law, 12,000 to 9,000.

This was an added surprise for supporters of the law made much of the rumored war plans of the German general staff for sweeping through this part of Switzerland and to attack France south of her line of forts. Those favoring the law argued it was necessary to defend Swiss neutrality.

Geneva approved the law by 19,472 to 14,521, the opposition being much larger than the normal Marxist vote. Tessin, Swiss-Italian canton, backed the measure by 17,000 to 12,000.

Supporters of the law stressed that it left Switzerland still with only three months' annual military term for the initial year of service. Denmark's term is five months, Belgium's eight, France's twelve, Italy's eighteen and Czechoslovakia's twety-four.

The Marxists argued the law strengthened the military and fascist spirit and at best was an unnecessary expense. They stressed that the millions of francs involved could better be spent to help unemployed workers and peasants in debt. The basic Swiss military law, which this act amends, was approved by a referendum in 1907 by 330,000 to 268,000.

South American Nations Revising Pacts With Japan

Hope To Regain Exchange Balance By Increasing Exports

Several South American countries, notably Brazil, Peru and Chile, are revising their trade relations with Japan, hoping to give a fillip to their own export trade and, at least, restore some exchange balance, says the Christian Science Monitor.

The Nipponese drive to capture the South American market has been too successful; it has forced the Occidental republics to impose import restrictions because of the increasing discrepancy in Japanese purchases and sales in this market.

Blame U.S. and Europe

The Japanese traders who are disappointed by the precipitate character of the precipitate character of the restrictive orders, especially in Chile, blame their present troubles on American and European trade rivals who, they allege, have magnified the "Japanese dumping menace" and urged a change of policy before Latin-American governments. The truth probably lies halfway between. Japanese imports before the yen was depreciated and Nipponese industry organized, were negligible, so that when the recent trade offensive brought substantial gains, the increases sounded tremendous in terms of percentages, whereas the total quantities and values were still only a fraction of the aggregate import trade of South America.

Chile was one of the first countries to stem the increasing tide of Japanese imports. Representations by national manufacturers, reinforced by objections from other trading nations that exchange from their purchases of Chilean produce was diverted to pay for Japanese goods, resulted in a ruling by the Central Bank that in future Japanese imports can only be paid for by yen bills arising from Chilean exports to that country.

The Japanese minister in Santiago is endeavoring to obtain fulfillment of orders already placed, but it is obvious that by a mere stroke of the pen the Central Bank has put an end to import expansion, as there is little likelihood of Japan increasing her purchases of Chilean nitrate, copper and wool to increase her exports to this country.

Peru Studies Situation

The disproportionate trading between Peru and Japan—varying in recent years from 4 to 1 to 9 to 1 in the latter's favor—has stirred the Lima Government to study the situation, prompted by national manufacturers and importers who have been seriously affected by the Japanese trade drive.

The national textile interests have long been bitter on the subject and addressed several memorials to the Government. The Benavides administration, realizing the justice of the complaint, determined on negotiations with the Tokyo Government as a result of which there will probably be a revision of the existing trade pact between the two countries to provide a more equitable basis for future exchange.

In Brazil, where hitherto Japan has made striking economic progress and been encouraged by the existence of a large Japanese colony of immigrants, there is also the specter of future barriers. Any further admission of the purely immigrant classes, of course, now seems out of the question in view of the change of policy by the Rio Government.

Hopes of improving what hitherto has been a satisfactory volume of trade, however, are strong in the minds of the Japanese who, through their Federation of Chambers of Commerce, have dispatched a technical and propaganda mission to the Brazilian capital.

Laugh Is On Lady Astor In Quip About Stockings

While discussion of unemployment in the hosiery industry was under way in the House of Commons in London on Feb. 28, Minister of Labor Oliver Stanley was asked whether he could induce British women to wear English stockings.

"Perhaps the honorable gentleman," Mr. Stanley replied, "would start with Lady Astor, who is in front of him." Loud shouts of laughter greeted this remark, and there was further laughter as Lady Astor, whose pointed remarks often have enlivened sessions arose protesting. The speaker interrupted her.

Lady Astor shouted: "Oh, Mr. Speaker, my honor is at stake, my modesty. How does he know?"

Renewed gales of laughter greeted this remark.

324 Blood Transfusions

On Christmas Day, 1934, Ed "Spike" Howard of Philadelphia gave a quart of blood for a transfusion that marked the 324th major blood transfusion in his career. This record does not include transfusions to infants and children requiring less than 100 c.c. of blood because Howard says he "does not bother to keep track of anything less than a hundred c.c." Howard, who is now 57 years old, is a veteran athlete and strong man, which probably accounts for his unusual physical ability to establish such a remarkable record of successful transfusions. Every one of the many patients to whom he has been a blood donor has lived.

sembly session in September.

As a result of these developments, arising directly or indirectly from Japan's withdrawal, the diplomatic scene has changed considerably since March 27, 1933 when Yosuke Matsuoka announced Japan's intention to leave Geneva.

Then Soviet Russia was diplomatically isolated. Now it appears to have a strong potential ally in France and the members of the Little Entente. While Japan is diplomatically isolated, a Soviet delegate sits on the Council of the League.

While this change in position may mean nothing to the Soviet Union in a military way in the event of a war with Japan, it does increase its chances of a favorable hearing at the bar of world opinion.

Tourist Resorts In Britain Draw Record Throngs

Renovation And Reduced Rail Fares Credited For Striking Rise

Continual renovation and rebuilding at seaside resorts in Britain and greatly decreased rail fares have shown themselves justified by increased tourist trade, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

Official Home Office returns of visitors to Britain during 1934 establish the fact that all records since the beginning of the trade revival were broken.

The total number of visitors during 1934 was 288,598, an increase of more than 28,000 on the figures for 1933. Of these visitors, 207,000 came for their vacations, while 81,000 came over to do business with British firms.

Passenger traffic from the United States has increased for the first time since the trade depression began. The 1934 total was 57,377, an increase over 1933 of 2706. The volume of continental travel to Britain during 1934 has never been exceeded.

Even then no account can be taken in the Home Office returns of week-end visitors from France and Belgium who are able, through special tickets, to dispense with passports. This is a comparatively new class of travel and, according to information from railway companies, is rapidly increasing.

There is no method, either, of checking accurately the number of visitors from the dominions who travel on British passports. It has been estimated that they number 100,000 a year.

Italian Army Has 7 Million Reserves

Males Between 18 And 55 Liable To Service

An official communique issued on Feb. 26 answers doubts expressed in some quarters of the wisdom of sending considerable bodies of troops to the colonies at present, when the European situation is so uncertain and when their services may be required elsewhere at almost any moment.

The communique points out that according to the latest Fascist legislation all able-bodied Italian males between 18 and 55 years of age are liable to military service in wartime. If necessary, therefore, Italy could mobilize 7,000,000 to 8,000,000 men, according to Armaldo Cortesi in the New York Times. The forces sent, or about to be sent, to Africa thus sink into complete insignificance, as they amount to less than onehalf of 1 per cent of the total.

To reassure the Italian population still further, the communique adds that no European complications are foreseen at present and that they are becoming increasingly unlikely as a result of the recent Rome-Paris understandings. Moreover, the dispatch of troops to the colonies does not represent a weakening of the standing army in Italy as two new divisions are being formed to take the place of those destined for service in East Africa, while all stores and material dispatched to Eritrea and Somaliland are being immediately replaced.

Jerusalem Shops Shut In One-Day Rent Strike

Stores in Jerusalem were to be shuttered on March 1, in protest against rising rents and the refusal of the Municipal Council to pass a rent restriction law, the Jerusalem Shopkeepers Association decided recently, says the New York Times.

Landlords have given public notice that in May at the beginning of the Moslem new year, known as Muharram, rents on shops and other business premises will be raised from 60 to 100 per cent and more. The shopkeepers hope by their protest to force the Municipal Council to adopt a rent regulation ordinance such as those of Tel Aviv and Haifa.

'False Packing' Of U.S. Cotton Hit In Britain

Manchester Spinners Protest American Practice—Ask Evil Be Stopped

In the annual report of the Federation of Master Cotton Spinners' Associations, it is revealed that the moisture content and "false packing" of American cotton have both been the subjects of investigation, says the Manchester correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. The first was in consequence of a recommendation from the International Cotton Committee that tests should be made by affiliated associations with a view to arriving at a standard amount of moisture for American cotton to apply to all countries.

As a result of a year's tests at the Shirley Institute the federation adopted a resolution to the effect that it was "not in favor of fixing any standard amount of moisture content for American cotton."

In consequence of continued complaints of "false-packed" American cotton, the federation caused a questionnaire to be issued by members on the subject. From the replies received it was evident that the practice was becoming more and more widespread. Complaint was made, almost without exception, of what is known as the "plated" bale, or, in other words, a bale composed of good cotton upon the exterior and decidedly inferior cotton in the interior, and packed in such a manner as not to be detected by customary examination.

The foreign matter found within the bales included pieces of wood and iron, cotton containing dirt and sand, oily, mildewed, and paraffin (kerosene) stained cotton, all of which are causes of considerable loss, annoyance, and inconvenience to the spinner.

Strong representations have been made to the United States Department of Agriculture and the American Cotton Shippers' Association by the federation, and in view of the fact that American cotton growers are now being called upon to face keener competition from outside growths than ever before in the history of the trade, it is felt that it behooves the American Government in its own interests to take immediate and effective measures for overcoming the evil referred to and thus help to safeguard the markets which remain open to it.

It is stated that in the event of the complaint persisting, the federation will be compelled to advise members concerned to give serious consideration to the use of outside growths.

Hays Seeks To Enlist Justice Men In Movies

The possibility that crack agents of the Department of Justice may soon be portrayed as movie heroes developed on Feb. 28 after a parley between Will H. Hays, film czar, and Attorney General Cummings.

Mr. Hays, who was Postmaster General under President Harding, talked briefly with the Attorney General and then conferred with two assistants in the department. Later he planned to discuss his idea with J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Bureau of Investigation, says the New York Times.

"We have had excellent cooperation with the army and navy," said the former Cabinet officer. "Some of our best pictures have been filmed with these services. Certain film companies now are interested in similar possibilities with far-flung justice agents."

Department of Justice officials said the proposal was under consideration.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

Plays Promised On New Programs

out of Hollywood in a long time that deals with London's noted Chinatown, "Limehouse," will soon be seen in Tokyo.

The film was directed by Alexander Hall, and features George Raft, Jean Parker, Anna May Wong Montagu Love and Kent Taylor.

The story of "Limehouse Blues" is a thrilling account of a three-cornered fight for love. Raft, lord of the district, is the leading silk smuggler, masking his operations under the cloak of a respectable restaurant owner.

Raft's sweetheart, Anna May Wong, worships and respects him, and stands back of him until Jean Parker, a crook, runs to Raft to escape the police. Raft falls in love with her, not knowing that she is the operative of his rival, Montagu Love. Through a maze of complicated smuggling deals, Raft and Miss Parker are drawn closer together.

Even thought the girl offers him only her friendship, this fiery, half-world chieftain, whose life is so twisted and dishonest, is tender with this girl whose love he seeks but knows he can't have. How she finds happiness and real love, and how Raft and his Chinese sweetheart solve their problems bring the film to an unusual finale.

Peck's Bad Boy Coming

No man or boy will see the room occupied by Jackie Cooper in "Peck's Bad Boy," soon to be seen in Tokyo without an envious thrill, for it is the kind he dreams about.

Jackie Cooper, who plays the title role in the Fox Film, was really responsible for the "props." Whatever he thought he'd like to own and have in his play-room and bedroom was provided, regardless of cost, for Bill's father in the film production is able to buy his son everything a boy might want.

The "motif" of the room is nautical and reflects the reading Jackie has been doing recently, since he appeared as Jim Hawkins in "Treasure Island." The lamp by the bedside is set into a pilot wheel. A larger one stands above the dresser, outlining the mirror into which Jackie seldom looks. Then there are motor-boats (models, of course, but some of them practical), yachts, sloops, "windjammers" with their intricate rigging, and piratical craft, low and rakish. In a corner, a bench and tools; also a microscope for the inspection of the strange bugs a boy finds, and littered about are various models of airplanes, hydro-planes and monoplanes.

But the crowing treasure is the radio which is set in just above Bill's head and cunningly hidden in the top of the bedstead.

Arliss in Comedy

Perhaps the most unusual comedy to reach the screen since the inception of talkies is "The Last Gentleman," George Arliss, new 20th Century starring vehicle, which will soon be released in Tokyo by United Artists.

The story, which depicts the amusing and eventful efforts of an eccentric but lovable old millionaire to choose a worthy heir among his various and colorful relatives, offers Arliss another great role and the brilliant artist achieves another characterization as rich and complete as, if in a lighter vein than his recent triumph as Nathan Rothschild in "The House of Rothschild."

"The Last Gentleman," which Leonard Praskins adapted from a play by Katharine Clugston, employs the talking screen in a unique manner which results in a tremendously effective surprise ending.

Interest Taken In Ningyo Stage

written by Chisetsu Omori. Other new plays are promised, and playwrights who thought it beneath their dignity to compose for the humble marionettes are likely to have a change of heart.

New Heads and Scenery

To rescue the ningyo from stagnation, it will be necessary to give them new faces, hands and feet, fine raiment, and producers must pay more attention to the settings against which the radiant figures act.

A neglected field of the stage, as far as the ningyo are concerned, is the lighting effects necessary to the moving figures. No experiments have been tried to enhance the attractions of the dramatic dolls moved by three men. Much stage magic may be discovered in the use of lights and shadows on the Ningyo Stage.

Nothing is ever the matter with the ningyo. Men may come and men may go, but the marionettes go on forever. They may be forgotten, mistreated, but there will always be found stagefolk to recognise their value as exponents of drama.

Social and Personal Notes

Mr. G. M. Zampolini, well known Argentina painter, is now at the Imperial hotel. He arrived in Tokyo two days ago to paint Japanese landscapes and to study Japanese art. Since he left Buenos Aires in January, Mr. Zampolini has travelled in Brazil and the Balearic islands where he did many landscapes.

Mr. Zampolini was born in the Piemonte province of Italy and went to Argentina in his youth. He studied under Mr. Baudilio Alio, master of painting in Argentina, for a while but later he created his own style which today is famed both in his native and his adopted countries.

For more than 25 years, Mr. Zampolini has been a resident of Buenos Aires where he has given many successful exhibitions. He also has given a number of exhibitions in Europe.

In recent years, he has exhibited successfully in Madrid, Rome, and New York City in addition to those in his own country. One of his landscapes was bought by the Italian government and is now hung in the National Museum of Modern Arts in Rome. Two of his paintings have been bought by the government of Brazil.

Mr. Zampolini has painted two portraits of Mussolini. One was painted at the first anniversary of of the foundation of the Fascist government and the other on the 10th anniversary. He has been granted several audiences with the Italian dictator.

In an interview with the Japan Times, Mr. Zampolini said he planned to stay in Tokyo one week to paint a number of scenes. He said he admired Japanese paintings and Japanese people, the latter particularly because "they are very active and they are good workers. . . . above other nations in this respect." The artist said his present trip to Japan is the fulfillment of a long cherished ambition. From Tokyo he will go to Nikko, Kyoto, Kobe and then on to China en route back to Argentina.

On his way back, Mr. Zampolini will visit his 86-year-old mother in his native town in Italy. Asked what were his favorites among his own paintings, Mr. Zampolini showed a canvas depicting Mt. Fuji arising above the spring landscape and one of Beethoven, whose works have inspired him since he was a child. In his youth, he studied the violin and when, years later, he turned to painting, one of his first successful pictures was a portrait of Beethoven.

Early Denies Roosevelt Plot To Curb Press

President's Secretary Hits Censorship Charges In Article For Magazine

The intimation that the New Deal, through "wholesale hiring" of newspaper men, has sought to bring about a virtual censorship of the press in Washington, draws a sharp retort from Stephen Early, secretary to President Roosevelt, in an article in the current issue of "The Red Book Magazine." Mr. Early wrote the article in reply to one by Theodore G. Joslin, who was President Hoover's secretary, appearing in the preceding issue of the magazine, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Joslin "is reveling in bunk," Mr. Early writes, in the attempt to show that the Administration is seeking to control the press in any way. The Roosevelt secretary remarks that "it is impossible to fool newspaper men with propaganda."

"If there is a censorship, I ought to be mixed up in it," he writes. "If there is a plot to curb the press, I must be one of the plotters. Besides, I am partly responsible, at least, for the fact that a number of former newsmen have come into the government service as public relations officers of various agencies. In my secretarial capacity, it seems to be my plain duty to say that Mr. Joslin is talking through his hat, and, speaking as one secretary to another, I know that he must have at least one tall silk hat.

"The second reason is that as a newspaper man, of many years' experience in Washington, I know something about the Washington corps of correspondents. From that standpoint, I defy any Administration to fool them with propaganda, or even undertake such a thing. Believe me, they are not babes in the wood. Many of them know far more concerning the processes and philosophy of government than some officials. All of them are keenly alert to any threat to their freedom of action. They are instantly aware of any attempt to flatter or cajole them. In their impersonal view, Presidential secretaries are but passing ships in the night.

"From this standpoint, again, I say that Mr. Joslin is reveling in bunk.

"In general, about the most concrete charge the author makes is that President Roosevelt permits himself to smile, thereby incurring great danger that the press will be bewitched. But there are some things in the article that should be treated in the light of setting the record straight.

"First, however, let me go back to an incident which involved Mr. Joslin and myself, and which, according to my notion, fairly warrants recounting as a way of establishing the background of his approach to this matter.

"In December, 1932, I was called to Warm Springs by Franklin D. Roosevelt—then President-elect—and for the first time acquainted with Mr. Roosevelt's desire that I become his press secretary. I accepted, and the handling of press relations under the new Administration was discussed. Returning to Washington, I was invited by Mr. Joslin, then one of President Hoover's secretaries, to confer with him. I did so. Mr. Joslin graciously offered his co-operation. He asked me what plan I had in mind for handling the press.

"In response to Mr. Joslin's question, I told him frankly that Mr. Roosevelt meant to throw open his press conferences to direct verbal questions. That meant that any member of the press eligible to attend could fire queries at him at will. It meant that the President, facing two hundred or more newspaper men, would expose himself to cross-examination on subjects possibly involving delicate considerations. It meant that hostile interrogators could do their worst. The only reservation was that the President could talk 'off the record' or for 'background.'

"Mr. Joslin was horrified.

"He said in substance: you cannot do that. Suppose the President made a mistake. Then he would have to take the blame for it himself. A President cannot do that. That is what the Presidential secretaries are for—to take the rap when it is necessary to ease the President out of a tight spot.

"When Mr. Joslin made his comment on the plan that had been laid out for dealing with the press under the Roosevelt Administration, I was obliged to tell him that the incoming President had ideas differing vastly from those of the preceding regime.

"Mr. Roosevelt takes the newspaper men as they come. There are no favored groups who are called into private seances because they are friendly to the Administration. There are no 'big shots' invited to be the President's special guests when he is traveling. At the outset equal treatment for all and equal respect for the rights of all were decided upon as a rigid policy."

Family Name Now Necessary For All Turks

Gazi's Ruling Sends Citizens To Archives For Ideas; Titles Discarded

"What are you going to call yourself," is the general topic of conversation in Turkey nowadays.

It results from the latest revolutionary measure to be decreed by the Gazi, Mustapha Kemal, the Turkish President. Every Turk must adopt a family name, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

This has sent almost everyone hunting for something he can adopt as surname which will be both appropriate and pure Turkish. To aid the choice, a list has been drawn up under official auspices giving a limited number of names, but these can only satisfy a hundred persons and so the search continues.

The Grand National Assembly took upon itself the choosing of a name for Mustapha Kemal and, by unanimous vote, decided on Ataturk. "Ata" means father, ancestor, or greatest. As Kemal is the greatest, the animator, and leader of present-day Turkey his new surname, meaning Father of the Turks, is well chosen.

Kemal Ataturk has, in turn, as signed the name "Inunu" to Ismet Pasha, for the Turkish Prime Minister made history by winning the battle of Inunu.

Changing Registers

All and sundry are conforming as rapidly as possible to the new law and are taking the necessary steps to have their new family names inserted in the civil registers and making public announcements of the change for the benefit of their friends and business acquaintances.

In addition to the above reforms a law has just been voted which abolishes the use of any titles, except military ranks. Pasha, Hazretleri (meaning Excellency) Agha, Bey, Effendi, Hanoum and so on, are titles which no longer exist. It has been decided that such titles imply some grade of superiority or some privileged position and as such do not conform to the principle of democracy, which is equality.

Henceforth, all civilians will simply use their first names and surname. For men, the courtesy title of "Bay," instead of "Bey," may be used before the name, and for women, that of "Bayan." These two words are stated to be ancient Turkish words, but they must not be used officially.

Pasha Abolished

In the army and navy, the title of Pasha has been conferred on many generals and admirals but, under the new law, it will be discarded. Officers of high command will, in future, be known as Maresal, Jeneral and Amiral. These names also figure as being of Turkish origin and will be spelled as above.

The wearing of decorations has been made illegal. Only military medals retain their place. Turkish diplomatic representatives abroad, in order to avoid embarrassing situations, will be allowed to accept decorations conferred upon them by foreign governments, but in no circumstances must they wear them.

These new and rapidly applied reforms may lead to considerable confusion for some time to come, for it will be somewhat difficult to memorize quickly the new and unfamiliar surnames. For instance, Kemal Ataturk, Ismet Inunu and Rushdi Aras will be difficult to associate with the now famous Mustapha Kemal, Ismet Pasha and Tewifik Rushdi Bey, and only continual and long use will again bring them to their popular place.

Two years ago, the Gazi conceived the idea of giving to Turkey a language of its own, a tongue free from Persian and Arabic, and devoid of the multitude of expressions and distorted words borrowed from European languages. Almost at the same time he ordered current history books to be destroyed and replaced by others which give a totally different version of the origin of the Turks from that generally known. After profound study he had discovered that the Turks were the oldest race in the world—a fact of which historians in general had been strikingly ignorant.

Tracing Race Origins

His desire, by these further reforms, was to invest the Turkish people with the belief that they had great ancestors and traditions; that they had not merely sprung up from nowhere as if by mistake. Special commissions were formed to investigate and develop the subject which certainly presented many difficulties. The study of ancient history, however, yielded comparatively easily an astounding amount of data which was accepted as proof that Turks can trace their ancestry back much further than any other people.

But the purging of the Turkish language of foreign words left a greatly depleted vocabulary. The linguistic commission got hard at work and its daily discoveries revealed scores and hundreds of unknown, or rather forgotten, words. The press and the public were somewhat slow to adopt this, to them new-old language. So the Gazi has now issued an official invitation to all newspaper editors to write their leaders in "pure" Turkish.

Only a few Turkish citiens can, as yet, understand these articles, but there has been a great resumption of home-work: nearly every Turk is relearning Turkish just as he relearned to write when the Latin alphabet was introduced. The Gazi himself knows the pure Turkish language better than anyone else and he set an example by making his speech, at the occasion of the opening of the present Parliament, in this tongue.

Soccer Interport Will Be Played On Saturday

One of the brains of the team. Is good both in attack and in defense. A smooth working and delightful pivot. Always in splendid condition. A match-winner.

H. Schoene, left half back. A dour cup-tie player who, not always seen to advantage in ordinary games, produces his best in the interport. A very difficult man for an opponent to beat.

G. H. Oldridge, outside right forward. His first soccer interport. Shines equally at rugby as at soccer. Fast and determined, he worries the opposition defense. Goes straight to his objective and heads and shoots the ball when given the slightest chance.

R. Dahl, inside right forward. A clever little player, rather on the light side. Full of tricks and can score goals at awkward angles.

H. J. D. Rooke, center forward. An old interporter. Fast and fearless. Plays a regular cup-tie game and has a shot like a 'cannon-ball.' Has been injured most of the season but now, owing to Prof. Morelli, is one of the fittest men on the team.

R. A. Roberts, inside left forward. A very clever and experienced footballer. Always a hard worker in any game. He has a most elusive swerve and invariably beats his man when dribbling.

R. J. Steer, outside right forward. A player with terrific dash who can shoot with great force on the run. A former interport captain who is enthusiastic throughout. In splendid condition.

R. H. A. Berrick, reserve player. Very fast and elusive. Rather on the light side. Plays cleverly on the wing. Has been in the first XI all season.

M. L. Russell, reserve player. A very bustling right half back. Always in excellent condition. Is an interport hockey player of quality, in fact, played in about a dozen different games. The utility man of the team.

Rev. Bernard W. Briggs, referee. The Padre is a good sporting 'home' soccer referee who has recently arrived in Japan. Knows the game from A to Z. Will certainly control the interport game well or any other Cup-tie.

Gordon Meadows, Yokohama linesman. An old interporter and a great sport. Has formerly played for Yokohama and Kobe for years at rugger and soccer.

An interport dinner and dance will be held at the Y.C. and A.C. on Saturday evening following the match, and all friends and members are courted to attend and help entertain the Kobe visitors.

An Outline of the Japanese Judiciary

Revised Second Edition

By JUDGE MASATARO MIYAKE

From the Preface

I have been asked frequently by English speaking people who wish to understand present day conditions in Japan if there is any work writen in English explaining the activities of the Japanese Judiciary. There are translations of the various codes; but there is no adequate literature to explain the administration of law. To supply this need until something more comprehensive is forthcoming, I have written these articles to show, mainly, by the use of statistics, the actual condition and working of the Japanese Judiciary. Those who care to examine the figures given in the text will find a good deal of information hidden therein.

An Authoritative Work in English which no Student of Japanese life and institutions may neglect. Here is described the whole judicial system of the nation with special attention paid to the penal system treatment of prisoners. Illustrated with photographs and many pertinent statistics.

DR. MOTT SPEAKS AT KYOTO DOSHISHA COLLEGE

"Resist pessimism as a devil, for it is a disease" was the advice given by Dr. John R. Mott Wednesday evening in addressing the multitude that packed the auditorium of Doshisha Women's College of Kyoto. His scheme called for suggestions as to an attitude for days of depression. After pointing out that the present age is one of testing, when pessimism may easily become the keynote of our lives, he enumerated a number of advantages which the situation is capable of evoking if individuals assume the proper attitude.

"For instance," he said, "testings may develop true humility, which is the crown of all the virtues. Being the most strategic of virtues, it may lead to the greatest secrets and discoveries, and liberation of power. This self examination thereby induced may assist us to recapture the lost art of meditation. Unless this is done, one cannot rightly estimate the values of our generation. For such an estimation requires guiding principles as inherrant as the North Star. But once this is accomplished, powers are released, which even in the invalid are sufficiently strong to startle the world".

"Of the powers, the one most needed by our generation, is Heart Power", he continued. "It is this power that evokes brotherhood, sympathy and love. We may be certain that every person we meet has two characteristics: he has had sorrows, and temptations. Now anything that multiplies contacts at these points is not without its advantage. Because the depression has served to do this very thing, it can have good outcomes.

"We all believe in God Almighty, an ever creative God who is eager to break through our personalities with new things. Our generation calls therefore for persons who will break with precedent, who will be lonely adventurers, who will dedicate themselves to making unpopular causes triumphant.

"Leaders are needed for such work. A leader is one who knows the way, thereby keeping ahead, and capable of getting others to follow. Qualifications for leadership today are quite different from those of a few years ago. We see now that our leaders of the past age were in many instances blind leaders of the blind tumbling multitudes into ditches.

"The present testing has also enabled the world to find the larger unit. I've never seen Christian division so unwise and un-Christian as today. Despite the values conserved by the sects, there is a crying need for a larger synthesis, that will bring together in a large unity all men. Christ prayed that all might be one, not as an end within itself, but that thereby the world might believe. If the world does not believe, it is because of a lack of unity of his followers.

"Before every opportunity God sent some especial trial. And if you will pardon a personal experience, it has been the same with me. Before all the opportunities that have come to me, there have always been trials. This lesson is written all over the pages of history. We may conclude that we are not on a great threshold of opportunity because we are now passing through a time of great trial.

"The greatest value of the present crisis is that it requires us to form an acquaintance with the loving and living God. Having made this acquaintance, we must climb several mountains taking a forward and backward view. The first must be the mount of vision, from which we can see things to come in their true dimensions. The second is the mount of warning, for since we are heading into danger, we need prophets who can light the warning fires just as were done in the times of William Tell, which will tell us the times when we must avoid danger. The third mount is that of transfiguration where profound changes take place in individuals. The last is the mount of loneliness and suffering. The founder president of Doshisha, Dr. Neeijma once admonished his students 'When you have fought once, two or three times do not stop there. Do not stop until you have spent every arrow, broken every bone and spilled all your blood for truth.' Such battles make possible the winning of the world.

"We, to derive the maximum values from the present situation, must keep our eyes in the proper direction," he concluded. "We must keep focused on the central figure of the ages. Christ never leads into any blind alleys, but always to springs of living waters. He is the generating center of the changes that must take place in the world. Regardless of religious affiliation, the only hope for the world is that we shall unite in following where he heads."

Nazi Designs Stir Soviet War Fears

Russians View Rearming, Road Building And Struggle For Prestige As A Menace

Born of war and nurtured in civil strife and foreign intervention, the Soviet regime has always stressed the danger of a fresh attack by its foes.

At times the fears seemed exaggerated—more bogy than reality—or even a political maneuver to rally the "home front" by a reminder that the enemy might at any moment be battering the outer gates. But never in the fourteen years of this correspondent's experience in this country has the fear of war seemed so widespread and so genuine as today, writes Mr. Walter Duranty to the New York Times from Moscow. His article of February 25 follows:

There is the important difference that the war fear nowadays is less mixed than formerly with a fear of defeat—the Soviet Union is conscious and has confidence in the Red Army.

Leaders Are Apprehensive

Nevertheless, it is idle and impossible to disguise the fact that the Soviet leaders view the present world situation with the gravest perturbation and are far from being soothed or deluded by the apparent improvement in international relations that marked the final months of last year and the beginning of this year. To them it is little better than the calm that precedes a storm, because, in their opinion, the facts of the case speak louder than words or pacifist gestures. These facts as seen here are as follows:

First, the development of German armaments at the utmost rate of which the most industrialized country in Europe, under a single and resolute control, is capable.

Second, the accompaniment of German rearmament by a gigantic road-building and motorization campaign, which has a double purpose and effect—to create an efficient and disciplined army of road-builders with the latest road-building machinery and to develop automotive transport of all branches.

Third, Chancellor Hitler's avowed intention of "restoring Germany's lost prestige and power" by aggressive action to the East—that is, at the expense of the Soviet Union.

Fourth, the deliberate pursuance, as the Russians see it, of this policy in its preliminary stages.

The Russians see on one side German-inspired intrigue and espionage in the Ukraine and White Russia and around Leningrad and on the Karelian border next to Finland. On the other side they see German political activities in Poland, Finland and the Baltic States.

Meanwhile, "behind the lines" is discerned intense German diplomatic action of all kinds, from a plan to win Polish support by a promise of Lithuania to attempts to lull the British and even the French to acquiescence by concessions on the matters in which they are chiefly interested—for instance, the air pact for Britain—and by appeals to every form of anti-Soviet sentiment. Furthermore, the Soviet has good reason to suspect there is an understanding, which may at a given moment become more than an understanding, between Germany and Japan.

France Aware of Situation

Against this mass of facts and suspicions what can be said in rebuttal?

First that France is aware of the German designs and aware, too, that a German victory in the East would have subsequent disastrous consequences for France. But no student of French Affairs today can entertain delusions about the stability of the present French Government—or any French Government—or believe that France is any longer the dominant factor in Europe.

Second, there is Britain which certainly does not want war and believes with good reason that any war, however apparently or initially "localized" would sooner or later drag in neutrals. Yet Britain cannot give much cause for rebuttal, to judge by her present readiness to accept the vague German offer to discuss the Anglo-French proposals as a whole but pay attention first and principally to the air pact. And, as the Soviet knows, there are powerful influences in Britain that could contemplate without horror a settlement of European problems at the Soviet's expense.

Time Element Important

Third, there is the time element. The German preparations are still far from complete and each day that passes strengthens the Soviet defense, in perhaps no less a degree than the German offense, and makes it clearer to the world what Germany is trying to accomplish.

In this connection the fourth factor—the attempt to stabilize European frontiers by a system of pacts and a mobilization of public opinion behind these pacts—has obvious importance. But is it certain that pacts or treaties are less "scraps of paper" to Chancellor Hitler than they were to Kaiser Wilhelm? Or that if the pacts were signed in the sufficiently near future to avert a catastrophe their signatories would all leap to arms against any one who infringed them?

Here, too, there is no impressive factor of rebuttal to the Soviet's fears of war.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Chapel of St. Leonard

The chapel is situated in the "oldest edifice" of Augsburg, Germany and dates back to the 12th century. It was "profaned" in the 30 years War and has been converted into a restaurant in 1914. The house is famous in history as the seat of the Welser family. The Welsers together with the Fuggers of Augsburg grew immensely rich in the 16th century and became the first modern millionaires. When Charles of Spain was up for election as German Emperor, the German electors insisted on being paid an enormous sum for their vote. For that purpose the Welsers and the Fuggers advanced Charles an enormous sum of money. As a result Charles was elected German Emperor, and repaid the favor by presenting the countries of Chile and Venezuela as a gift to the Welser-Fugger combine. The two countries have a total area of 680,000 square miles.

"Monsieur Beaucaire"

Jacques Foss of Beaucaire, France, a business man and non-professional saved his first man from drowning at the age of 10 years. Between the ages of 13 and 15 he saved an additional 5 men. At the age of 20 he saved 2 circus performers and their trained bear. The following year he received his first silver medal for saving another 4 people and in another year he received the Legion of Honor for saving 5 more. During his military service he saved 5 artillerists and their 2 horses who had fallen overboard. His greatest life saving feat occurred during the great inundations of the Department of Gard, France. There, working 8 days and 8 nights in succession he single-handedly rescued 860 drowning men and women. He received every possible medal and distinction, until the "expanse of his chest no longer sufficed for their location." He also rescued several women from a burning house.

Revenge

The lady was visiting the aquarium. "Can you tell me whether I could get a live shark here?" she asked an attendant.

"A live shark? What could you do with a live shark?"

"A neighbor's cat has been eating my goldfish, and I want to teach him a lesson."

Farm Advances Aid Roumania

Exports Rise As Peasants Use Better Methods Taught By State

An improvement in agricultural production in Roumania provides a bright patch against an otherwise gray background of economic life.

Announcement by Minister of Agriculture V. Sassu, at a recent Cabinet meeting presided over by King Carol, that noteworthy advances have been made in farming, has been welcomed here, says the Christian Science Monitor.

For example, the amount of land planted to grain last fall was 20 per cent more than during the preceding year. Very significant economies also have been made in the Forestry Department, in the State Fisheries and in the administration of state farms. In this last branch of the ministry, a deficit of 100,000,000 lei, about $1,000,000, was turned into a profit of 2,500,000 lei, or $25,000.

Exports Rise

There was an increase in the exportation of live animals, fruit and especially of timber. The export of corn shows a very large advance, both in quantity and value over that of last year. Also much larger areas were reforested than formerly.

All this, however, according to the minister, is but a beginning and this spring there is to be inaugurated an extensive village crusade, the aim of which will be the realization of a plan of directed village economy.

A detailed program will be worked out for each province in Roumania and expert agriculturists will be sent to put it into practice. In each village will be formed an agricultural committee composed of a teacher, a priest and other intelligent persons. Then above them will be county committees and above them the district agricultural expert.

Village Instruction

All agriculturists in state employ are to be sent out of their offices into the villages and 100 new experts have been employed for this drive.

What is specifically aimed at is to get the peasant to use better seeds, adopt better methods, and plant more valuable crops.

It is not a temporary campaign either, but part of a general plan. Many little model farms are to be established by placing land at the disposal of trained agriculturists. Premiums will be offered. Methods of sorting, classifying and marketing commodities will be taught, and efforts will be made to increase the worth of products of the soil by working them over in local factories or by feeding them to valuable farm animals.

British Government Plans Increase In Armaments

don, nevertheless the appearance at this juncture of so candidly uncompromising a re-statement must necessarily prove provocative to the Germans whose armaments certainly do not exceed those which Britain declares inadequate for itself.

The British Government is thus being told in the largest Opposition headlines that it is "sowing dragon's teeth" and forgetting the disarmament promises of the Versailles Treaty.

Equanimity

This attack has been received with equanimity in Government circles where the overwhelming majority view prevails that the honest course which has been taken of stating plainly exactly where Great Britain stands, so far from creating ill-will, is likely to have precisely the opposite effect, since it prevents misunderstandings which might easily jeopardize the peace. It is also pointed out that Britain's continental commitments and especially the Locarno Treaty render as an essential in Germany's interests as in those of France that the United Kingdom should be in position effectually to fill the role it has undertaken of helping to maintain European peace. Not to be prepared to keep abreast of the rearmament going on around it would, it is claimed, be merely to invite the fate that has overtaken China.

Great Britain made public plans to meet winged competition in Europe by adding 11 squadrons to its home defense air force during 1935.

(A British squadron consists of 12 airplanes.)

Estimates of this year's air defense expenditures totaled £23,851,100 (approximately $119,255,500), an increase of £3,685,500 (approximately $18,427,500) over the figure for 1934.

The addition of 11 extra squadrons will bring the home defense force up to a total of 54 squadrons, 41 of which compose the regular air force and the rest auxiliary craft. It also is planned to increase the strength of the air force by adding 19 first-line aircraft.

Total of 106 Squadrons

These new formations will raise the total strength of the Royal Air Force to 106 squadrons, of which 93 will be in regular service.

The estimates reflect the first stage of the expansion program which Parliament approved last summer. The program contemplates the addition of 41 squadrons by the end of 1938, when the first-line strength of the R. A. F. regular squadrons will number 1330 aircraft.

Four of the 41 additional squadrons were formed in 1934, while after this year's 11 new squadrons are organized, 14 more will be formed in 1936.

$19,750,000 Added

Great Britain added $19,750,000 to the 1935 army budget estimates yesterday and blamed the increase on Germany's increased armaments.

A new elastic policy of expansion for British Empire defenses was initiated by the Government in a White Paper presented to Parliament by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald almost on the eve of Sir John Simon's peace mission to Berlin.

Mr. MacDonald, in an unexpected attack, attributed Britain's feeling of insecurity particularly upon German rearmament, but also included to some extent American, Russian, Japanese and other increases in arms.

Danger Signals

With both feet the British Government jumped on the force and spirit with which the German people are being organized, and warned that peace was endangered. While such criticism has been made before in various ways, it takes on new significance just when Britain is trying to bring about a new foundation for peace by a co-operative security system on the continent.

The Government's statement in Parliament admitted failure of what it termed its own unilateral disarmament policy and urged a new naval agreement avoiding a naval race. It reiterated the capital ship foundation of British naval policy and renewed the view that Britain's frontier has moved outward from the English Channel.

Air Menaces

"From the point of view of aerial defense the integrity of certain territory across the Channel is more than ever before the vital interest of this country," said the statement.

"In formulating this policy (the defense expansion policy) the Government maintains confidence in the ultimate triumph of peaceful methods and adheres to the primary aim of consolidating peace.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

He Memorized All Homer In 21 Days

Joseph-Juste Scaliger, (1540-1609) the greatest of the French philologists, was born in France and died in Leyden, Holland. He mastered Latin, Hebrewk, Arabic, Persian, Syrian and practically all the languages of Europe at an early age. He came to Paris to study Greek under Prof. Tournebe, when he wrote his own Greek grammar after two months of studying the language. His most outstanding feat was memorizing the Iliad and the Odyssey in 3 weeks, before he acquired a complete mastery of the language. The other Greek classic poets were absorbed by him in the space of four months. This prodigious feat would be incredible were it not certified to by many contemporary scholars that he repeatedly performed excathedra by reciting the Iliad and the Odyssey from memory.

This man, who was capable of tremendous application, had a curious and lifelong aversion to milk. It is said that the mere sight of it would cause him to faint.

Man Turns Apelike; Seeks Medical Aid

Tail Growing, Head Enlarging, Legs Warping On Victim

The strange and pathetic story of a man whose appearance is gradually becoming apelike was revealed in Azusa, California recently.

George Bocklet, forty-nine years old, former Chicago commercial artist and interior decorator, appealed to Los Angeles medical men for help. His head is becoming huge—almost three times its normal size. His torso is shrunken and bent. His legs are warped. His arms are thin and elongated. He has severe pains at the base of his spine, which physicians have diagnosed as resulting from possible elongation of the coccyx—the appearance of a tail.

"I am taking on the appearance of an ape," Bocklet wrote Dr. Frank G. Nolan, Los Angeles physician.

Doctors say Bocklet is a victim of Plaget's disease—an affliction resulting from a pituitary and thyroid gland disorder—which sometimes gives its victims a subhuman appearance.

He was stricken eight years ago. He was only three inches short of six feet tall then. Now he is less than five feet. His body still is shrinking.

His neck has almost completely disappeared, and his huge head rests almost upon his shoulders, so that his chin rubs against his chest. His ribs, instead of being in their normal position, rest on his legs and are bowed forward in distinct arcs.

Bocklet said he has been examined several times by medical men, but none has offered him any hope of escaping the slow and painful death to which he has become reconciled.

Bocklet was born of German parents in Cincinnati, and was the youngest of several children. His brothers and sisters are all normal.

First indications of the disease came when he suffered severe pains in his head and spine, he said. Later, when he moved to Chicago, the pains became worse, and he appealed to the Northwestern University medical school, where the malady was first diagnosed as Plaget's disease. He was informed there was no known cure.

Then followed terrible years during which he watched his pain-wracked body become misshapen and ape-like in appearance. He appealed to the Mayo clinic at Rochester, Minn., but there, too, he was told treatment would be futile. Four years ago Bocklet came to California.

He was informed recently that a man similarly stricken had survived thirty-two years had shrunk until he was less than two feet in height.

Dr. Nolan said he believed a thyroid gland disorder was causing Bocklet's head to grow, his torso to shrink and his legs to warp. Splitting headaches, the physician believes, are caused by pressure on the brain from an excessive amount of spinal fluid. He plans to take X rays to learn whether this spinal fluid excess may not be linked with trouble in the thyroid gland.

War On Crime Gains Ground In Thirty States

Major Attack Through Revision Of Criminal Codes Making Progress In U.S.

A major attack on crime through revision of state criminal codes—the most comprehensive drive of its kind the United States has yet seen—is in progress, the American Bar Association of Chicago reports.

It draws this conclusion from information received from 30 states showing that bar associations in these commonwealths have caused to be introduced into their present legislative sessions proposals for the reform of their state criminal codes either in whole or in part, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

In at least 18 states, the association declares, there is promise of impressive results in the present legislative session. Proposals are all based to some extent on the model criminal code published by the American Law Institute of the American Bar Association in 1933 or on the uniform state acts issued by another section of the American Bar Association.

State Police Favored

Proposals include recommendations for a state department of justice, for a unification of law enforcement agencies, for a state police, and for reform of procedure, the last somewhat technical but nevertheless calculated to make the path of the criminal much more difficult.

What is happening in Illinois may be taken as a sample of the activity in other states. After studying the provisions of the model code of the American Law Institute, and after considering other proposals of the American Bar Association, members of the Illinois State Bar Association went to work upon a study of the need of their particular state, whose code is said to be antiquated. Gov. Henry Horner, himself a member of the legal profession, called a conference on crime last January which made specific recommendations along the lines suggested by the model code.

Reform State Being Written

But before presenting the program to the State Legislature, the Illinois Bar Association set to work to clarify its recommendations. The section of the state association on criminal law and its enforcement is now at work, through five committees on drafting reports to give effect to the findings of the Governor's Conference.

"Many fundamental reforms are under consideration by these committees and will undoubtedly be presented to the present Legislature for enactment into law when approved by the association," said Judge James S. Baldwin, of Decatur, Ill., president.

"Among the proposals that will be ready for legislative action this year," he said, "will be measures for the revision of the criminal code, a state police bill, a bill for a state scientific crime detection laboratory, a small firearms bill, an amendment to the habeas corpus act, and a bill for securing the return of material non-resident witnesses."

A revision of the criminal code of the State now being worked out by one of these committees proposes abolishment of the grand jury, substituting prosecution by information presented by the State's attorney or attorney general, or a committee in inquiry charged with the same powers and duties as the present grand jury.

It also proposes that when the defense of alibi is presented, notice must be given in advance, and it suggests that the Supreme Court be given the right to make rules of procedure in criminal cases.

It is expected that these recommendations will take their final form in March, when a meeting of the section is to be held to approve the reports. States particularly active this year are given as follows by the American Bar Association:

Several States Active

Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Texas and Utah.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The $6,000,000 Shoe

A huge shoe, 10 feet long, 8 feet high and 8 feet wide, complete in every detail even to shoelaces, eyelets and toe cap, stands in Elmer O. Chase's yard in South Braintree, Massachusetts. The shoe has windows and is large enough for a person to use as living quarters—the ideal home for the "Woman in the Shoe." Though the curious shoe is practically valueless today, except as an oddity, it was at one time worth $6,000,000. Several years ago, when the old large-size dollar bills were called in, a shoe manufacturing company acquired the mash of 6,000,000 pulverized dollar bills, mixed it with a plaster of composition and modeled the shoe. It was intended for the Chicago World's Fair, but the plan fell through, and now Mr. Chase has it on his premises—just to look at.

4-Year-Old-Bass Singer

Eugene Fox, a tiny boy of 4 years, surprised the contest editors of a recent Believe It or Not contest of the Washington, D. C. Herald, when he walked into their offices and demonstrated his ability to sing deep bass notes—as far down the scale as B flat below middle C. He was immediately scheduled for a series of radio broadcasts, and his deep rumbling voice astounded his listeners, especially when contrasted with high soprano.

of French miniature painters.

In the Augustin group are three interesting portraits of Napoleon and one of Queen Caroline. Also in the group are several portraits of the artist by himself, one of which is among the best miniatures Augustin ever executed. This portrait created a sensation when it was exhibited.

The Morgan collection also includes a rare portrait of Mlle. Constance Mayer by P. Prud'hon. In connection with this item, the catalogue points out that in 1906 a portrait of Mlle. Mayer by Prud'hon was exhibited in Paris, but comparison of it with the miniature in the Morgan collection proved that the latter was by far the finer work.

Among the miniatures by English artists are fifty-six examples of the work of Richard Cosway, the most brilliant miniature painter of the eighteenth century. One of Cosway's miniatures is an interesting unfinished portrait of Mme. du Barry, painted in 1791, when Mme. du Barry was in London.

FOLK DANCE PROGRAM

Seven representative folk dances and folk songs will be presented Friday, Saturday and Sunday at the Nippon Seinen-Kan under the auspices of the Federation of Young Men's Associations of Japan.

The program is presented every April, a time of leisure in the farming districts and the participants are all amateurs. They are given to keep alive the local spirit and to preserve the traditional arts characteristic of the farming communities of Japan.

The program will open with Kashima Odori in which the participants will be from Ogochi-mura, Nishitama-gun, Tokyo prefecture. This traditional dance, dedicated to the tutelary god, is performed every year in September by young men on the occasion of a festival held in a very remote village in the vicinity of the river Tama, the sourse of water supply for the city of Tokyo.

The performers are seven in number—a leader and six dancers, all attired in women's costumes, who dance to the accompaniment of a chorus, the music being furnished by drums, flutes and other instruments. The object of the dance is to sing praises to the god of Kashima, enshrined at the Kashima shrine.

The next dance on the program will be Roda Uta which consists of three labor songs sung by residents of Hinohara-mura, Nishitama-gun.

The first song is sung when kaya (miscanthus) is moved to make thatched roofs for the farmers' houses.

It is to the tune of the second song that wheat is beaten out with a sort of hand-flail or pounded into mortar.

The third song helps to lighten the strain when the cereals are being ground.

These three songs are a sort of diversion for those engaged in such labor and are sung by men and women in a bel ensemble without any musical accompaniment.

The third dance is Hotoke-no Mai, a dance of Buddha. The dancers are from Hanazono-mura, Itsu-gun, Wakayama prefecture.

The music of the fourth dance, Kowaka Mai, used to be a favorite with the Samurai class in feudal times, there being much in it to suggest tragedy. The Samurai on hearing this music at the start of a fight used to feel as if they had received a new inspiration to fight to the bitter end.

Another anecdote in connection with this music is that of a feudal lord who having lost the battle, had to commit suicide. Being much excited at the beginning, he regained his peace of mind when he heard this music during the last few moments of his life.

The fifth dance, Ayatsuri Ningyo is a marionette dance. Every district of Japan has a sort of marionette or puppet show which is characteristic to it. The style of this marionette belongs to the Bunraku school, there being three persons to manipulate one puppet, but the music which accompanies is peculiar to this district.

This performance is not meant for professionals nor can it be given on a regular stage. It is meant to be performed on a simple stage in a plain room of a rustic house by members of the rural community only.

The sixth dance is Onta. There has been since ancient times, a ceremony in the different parts of Japan in which the villagers gather in front of the village shrine, at the time of the New Year, to pray to the gods for a bountiful harvest. This dance consists of a pantomine which expresses different types of labor, from the planting of rice to the reaping of a harvest. The dialogue, words of prayer, songs and dances, are all blended into one harmonious whole.

This dance takes about two hours to perform and has therefore been divided into six sections of about 20 minutes each. The entire ceremony is one of the most serious as well as important elements of Japanese drama since the beginning of dramatic history in this country.

The last number on the program is the Bon Odori, which is undoubtedly the best known of the folk dances among members of the foreign community.

MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION HOLD GENERAL MEETING

The first general meeting of the 61st year in the history of the Missionary Association of Central Japan was held at the Osaka Church in Edobori, Osaka last Thursday afternoon and evening. The 160 or more persons in attendance were Christian workers from various points all the way from Nagoya to Okayama.

The two speakers from abroad were Dr. John R. Mott and Dr. Ivan Lee Holt, the newly elected President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

Dr. E. M. Clark, Chairman of the Association, presided throughout the afternoon and evening. "The Present World Situation and its bearing on Missions" was Dr. Mott's subject. He called attention to the fact that the world is in a more plastic state at present than for many years. "The danger spots are where the race questions are most keen," he said. "But it is encouraging to Christians that Christ helps men to transcend color and race differences. Outstanding examples of this may be found in Africa and in the recent anti-Semitic situation in Germany. We must never forget that we all have much to learn from others. Christians should stand together in cooperation and pool their knowledge, their experience, their personalities, and their planning. Economic justice and world peace are the two great problems of youth in America today. This must be recognized. There are many conflicting advices and many confused ideas, but in spite of all this these years are creative years."

Dr. Holt spoke on the subject, "Recent Trends in Foreign Mission Policy of the Home Church."

"We are living in a world changed from what our fathers knew but men and women and youth today are experiencing the same great emotions that have experienced in ages past, sin and sorrow and love," he said.

"There has been a changed attitude of mind but no decrease in spirituality. Men are confused in mind. They do not know what they may believe tomorrow. They are seeking in many directions for the way out—mysticism, social transformation, economic readjustment—like the Israelites in the Wilderness."

Dr. Holt also spoke of the immence debt which is hanging over the church in America.

"This will effect for a long time the giving to mission, he declared. "The two great passions of the young ministers in the American church today are for social and economic reform and for world peace. Along with these is a firm belief that individual conscience should control individual action. It should be a higher will even than the state. To meet the new conditions a new emphasis must be placed on religious education and on a deep spiritual experience. Individuals must be changed to create a changed environment."

Besides the two speakers from abroad representatives from some dozen or more missions spoke briefly regarding the main policies of their respective missions. Nearly every one emphasized the increasing responsibility which is being assumed by the Japanese.

During the afternoon and evening the assembly were delighted by special musical selections,—a piano solo by Miss Swetnam, a violin solo by Mr. Octavius Thorlaksson, and a trio by Miss Swetnam, Mr. Thorlaksson and Mr. Emile Muller. Tea was served in the afternoon and supper in the evening to some one hundred and fifty people.

3 Million School Children In U.S. Have Poor Eyes

American Associations Taking Steps To Remedy And Rectify Situation

Approximately 3,000,000 school children in the United States, one-eighth of the entire school population, are handicapped in their education by defective eyesight, it is disclosed in the report of a joint committee of the National Education Association and the American Medical Association cooperating with the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness.

Farsightedness is the most common visual defect among American school children, according to the report, prepared under the direction of Dr. Thomas D. Wood of Columbia University and published recently in New York by the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness with the title "Conserving the Sight of School Children." Astigmatism is next in frequency, and nearsightedness is third; other eye defects mentioned are cross-eyes and inflammation of eyelid lining.

Although the report recommends that the school should assume the primary responsibility for giving adequate attention to the eye health of children, it urges parents to learn what the school is doing in sight conservation and how they may cooperate in the home. The report says, further, that "it is not necessary that the school should furnish all the service required in the discovery and correction of the visual defects of children. These services may be secured from professional health organizations, family physicians, community health centers or elsewhere.

Correcting Defects

"The importance of good eyesight among school children cannot be overestimated. We have come to recognize that defective vision or disease in the eyes of the child not only may have detrimental influence on his school progress, but may react upon his general health and upon his adjustment to his school, his playmates, and even to his family. This recognition has given new impetus to the work of discovering and correcting visual defects among children, beginning with the preschool age.

"The farsighted child is not usually discomforted by seeing at a distance. It is the close eye work that distresses him. The printed page which the normal eye reads without undue muscular strain at a distance of 14 inches may appear alternately blurred and clear to the farsighted child. If the farsightedness is pronounced, sustained effort at close work is maintained only at the cost to the child of headaches nerve strain, fatigue, or vision that is definitely blurred. When the strain is more than he can endure and he sits back to look through the window at the distant hills, he is accused of lack of interest, lack of perseverance, and unwillingness to make an effort.

Nearsighted Child

"To the nearsighted child, objects beyond a certain distance appear to be indistinct or hazy in outline, and if the child is very nearsighted he may even pass his playmates on the street without recognizing them. If the book is too large or too heavy to hold up to his face, he brings his head nearer to the page. Such a position is not only harmful to the eye and fatiguing to its muscles, but is also fatiguing to the muscles of the neck and shoulders. The nearsighted child has a tendency to go off by himself to read, not because he is unsociable, but because he can see to read, while he cannot see to play ball. He may succeed very well in academic work and have the reputation of being a good student, but he may be doing this at the expense of his physical and emotional well-being."

Calling attention to the fact that children with crosseyes often become extremely sensitive and self-conscious because of the jibes of playmates and the thoughtless remarks of adults, the report says: "The sense of inferiority so often developed in children with squint may breed undesirable personality traits and unhealthful mental attitudes toward life. It cannot be overstressed that the most satisfactory results are obtained when the child with squint—no matter how young—is placed under the care of an ophthalmologist as soon as the defect is recognized."

School's Provision

In its concluding chapter, the report urges particularly that the school's provision for eye health should include medical supervision and special educational facilities for "children with such serious eye difficulties that after everything possible has been done for them they either cannot see well enough to profit by the usual school equipment or may be harmed by so doing." The report continues: "Probably one in 500 of the school population comes under this classification. This group has been designated as 'partially seeing.' They carry on their close eye work in sight-savings classes under the direction of specially trained teachers but join their normally seeing companions in those school activities that do not require close eye work.

"In addition to having optimum lighting and seating conditions, these children with seriously defective vision should be freed from the strain entailed by much writing in longhand. As early as possible they should be taught the touch system of typewriting, and it is obvious that the typewriter should be equipped with large type. It is important that the partially seeing child learn to gather information through his sense of hearing, and that he read only books printed in type that will cause no eye fatigue."

At the present time, 6,000 children are enrolled in the 458 sight-saving classes maintained by 145 communities, where the special educational facilities and teaching methods used are similar to those described in the report. Additional classes are needed, however, for about 44,000 other children, according to the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness

US Aluminum Co. Declared Trust In Jury Verdict

$956,300 Suit For Damages Is Tripled By Judge To $2,868,900

The Baush Machine Tool Company, of Springfield, Mass., won a verdict of $2,868,900 on March 9 in United States District Court against the Aluminum Company of America. The suit was brought under the Sherman anti-trust laws, and the plaintiff accusing the Aluminum Company of America of monopolizing the aluminum market.

The jury's award, after nine weeks of trial and thirty-four hours deliberation, was $956,300, which by order of Judge Harland B. Howe was tripled in accordance with the Sherman act, according to the New York Herald Tribune. The suit originally was for $3,000,000, which would have allowed, if successful, potential damages of $9,000,000.

Immediately after the decision, the Aluminum Company filed notice of appeal. The jury received the case, after the defense had lost a motion for a mistrial and had taken ninety-six exceptions to the charge by Judge Howe.

The court denied a motion for a new trial and a motion to set aside the verdict on the ground that it was against the evidence and the amount of damages was excessive.

"I think the verdict is in accordance with the evidence and the amount is not excessive," Judge Howe said. "It is too small, if any trouble could be found with it."

Addressing the twelve men who deliberated thirty-two hours before reporting the verdict, Judge Howe said:

"Gentlemen, I think your verdict speaks the truth and has the ring of righteousness."

The original suit brought by the Baush Company in 1928 was finally dropped after being put over on the docket several times. The second suit seeking the same damages as were asked in the action just concluded was brought July 24, 1931, and was tried by a jury in the United States District Court sitting at New Haven, with Judge Carrol C. Hincks presiding, in the fall of 1933. The verdict was then for the defendant, following a charge which lasted two and one-half days. The plaintiff appealed and the Circuit Court of Appeals ordered a new trial.

The Baush Company sought to prove by a mass of evidence that the Aluminum Company is a monopoly which has eliminated all competition in the production of raw aluminum in this country and has arrangements with foreign producers to the price in this country at an exorbitant level. The plaintiff further asserted that the Aluminum Company through tremendous profits on its virgin metal has been able to sell its sheet and fabricated forms at such a low price as to injure competitors who own rolling mills and must pay the market price for raw material.

Monopoly Denied

In its answer, the Aluminum Company offered evidence to sustain its stand that the growth of the company has not been monopolistic but has been due to the initiative and enterprise in building an industry based on the Hall discovery of the electrolytic process from a small beginning nearly fifty years ago. Constant research and expansion have been made possible, since that time, the defense maintained, only through adequate capital obtained through the policy of turning back the profits into the company.

The defense submitted evidence to show that although it was the only domestic producer of virgin aluminum in this country, it does not control prices of raw metal which can be obtained in the open market from foreign importers, from the rapidly growing scrap and re-melt market or from domestic sources.

The defense further contended that the prices it had charged for fabricated articles have not been for the purpose of killing off competition but to expand its output and increases the uses of aluminum in competition with other metals.

The Baush Company offered no evidence to show that it had purchased any metal from the Aluminum Company in the six yeas, 1925 to 1931, for which damages were asked. Its contention was that the prices it had to pay foreign importers was influenced and fixed through agreements on understandings between the foreigners and the Aluminum Company of America.

Judge Howe allowed as evidence the entire history of the company and all the acts of the company in that time whether done in this country or abroad. There were 571 exhibits introduced and 3,700 pages of testimony transcribed.

Court's Instruction to Jury

Judge Howe's instructions to the jury included four major points:

First, did the defendant monopolize interstate trade in virgin aluminum by conspiring with foreign importers to fix prices?

Second, after the Aluminum Company of America had transferred its foreign properties to the Aluminum, Ltd., of Canada, in 1928, did the American company then monopolize trade by conspiring with Aluminum Ltd.. to fix prices here?

Third, did the defendant by itself or its subsidiaries monopolize interstate trade in virgin aluminum?

Finally, did the Aluminum Company, a competitor in the fabricating field and also a producer of virgin aluminum, control both the price for raw material and the finished product so as to operate a "squeeze" against the plaintiff so it could not make a profit?

More than 3,700 pages of testimony were taken by three court reporters, including about 1,100,000 words. There were 571 exhibits.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

To the Poorhouse by Motor

Ross Weesner, now a resident of the Jasper County, Farm in Carthage, Mo., claims the distinction of being the first man (in Missouri, at least) to drive himself to the poor house in his own car. He did just that. Recently Mr. Weesner found himself divested of every worldly possession he ever had, except his 21-year-old automobile. Before any worse luck came his way he drove right up to the County Farm while he still had the means to get there.

Big Profit Laid To Values Put On Gas Utility

Write-Up Of Consolidated Set In New York Report At $270,000,000

Huge watering of stock and rates based on $279,000,000 of inflated capitalization is charged against the Consolidated Gas Company, parent concern of utilities enjoying a monopoly of electric power in New York City, by the Power Authority in a special report placed before Gov. Herbert H. Lehman and the Legislature on March 5, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

It declares that "the most conservative possible estimate" of the excess profits collected by the companies of the Consolidated system was $172,901,078 from the start of the Public Service Commission regulation in 1907 to the end of 1933, and urges that more than one third of the amount carried by the company as fixed charges "represents no actual value." A writing down of the capitalization of the company is urged.

Backs Mayor's Charges

Strong exception to the report is taken by Floyd L. Carlisle, chairman of the board of the Consolidated, who, in a statement today, declared it contained "great and obvious errors." One of these, he said, was the authority's assertion that $16,000,000 is all the working capital necessary to operate an electric business serving 7,000,000 persons.

The report is signed by every member of the Authority. They are Frank P. Walsh, chairman; James C. Bonbright, Fred J. Freestone and George S. Reed, trustees.

Their report is seen as tying in perfectly with charges by spokesmen of the Federal Administration in Washington in connection with President Roosevelt's power program and with those of Mayor LaGuardia here, who is working to get federal funds to build municipally owned power plants to meet municipal lighting and power needs.

The Authority holds that a fair rate base for the five properties of the Consolidated Company in New York City would be about $450,000,000, which is $279,000,000 less than Mr. Carlisle suggested when he appeared as a witness before the joint Legislative Committee Investigating Public Utilities here about 10 days ago.

Exhaustive Report Made

The Authority holds that to permit the merger of the Consolidated interests here, as Mr. Carlisle favored, without draining the water from the combined capitalization of the companies, would serve to fasten high electric rates on consumers in New York City indefinitely.

The report is an exhaustive one, covering 200 pages, and attempts to analyze the financial history of the New York Edison, the Brooklyn Edison, the Bronx Gas & Electric, the United and Electric Light & Power and the New York & Queens Electric Light & Power companies, all subsidiaries of the Consolidated.

Mr. Walsh, in a letter transmitting the report to the Governor and legislative leaders, said the survey was made public at this time in order that they might have a comprehensive statement of the electric power case that would permit them to study intelligently the proposal of the Consolidated System to put into effect here the so-called Washington plan of rate reduction following a merger of the companies.

"For years consumers of electricity in the metropolis have been carrying the burden of a capital account deliberately inflated at the outset and consequently rendered excessive," the report declares. "Through this means consumers have been forced to provide a great part of the capital used in extending the system. . . .

Doubled Valuation Seen

"At the beginning of the Public Service Commission regulation, the fixed capital on the books of the companies was more than twice the actual value of the property used in supplying electric service. The common stock of the companies, as a group, had no value behind it except the expectation on excessive profits from monopoly control of the city's electric service.

"The value behind the common stock today has been largely contributed by consumers through profits over and above 7 per cent return on legitimate investment, which have been reinvested in the business.

"As a result no injustice would be done to the Consolidated Gas Company, which as a holding company, owns practically all the stock of the electric companies, if the fixed capital were cut to the figure given as representing the actual value of the property as measured by economically rendered service."

Net Income Shown

According to the report the companies collected $717,859,265 in net operating income for the period 1907-1933.

"This represents an amount five times the original book value of fixed capital and ten times the value of the properties with the water squeezed out," it declares. "It exceeds by more than $100,000,000 the total increase in fixed capital over the entire period."

During this period the company disbursed $570,865,826 in interest and dividends, according to the report.

Meanwhile, the report declares, "property emeritus" has been kept on the companies' books at a value placed at "tens of millions of dollars," and "consumers are required to pay this 'property emeritus' a pension equal to its earning power when new."

"If the city had bought the companies in 1907 at their book value, double their actual value, the actual earnings since then would have paid all taxes, interest and depreciation costs and would have wiped out the original debt in addition," it adds. "They would now be free of debt."

Carlisle's Reply

Mr. Carlisle in his reply voiced gratification "that the last of the governmental boards interested themselves in the efforts of the New York City companies to inaugurate lower rates and increase the use of gas and electricity had expressed itself."

In questioning the correctness of the Authority's finding that no reduction in rates would be possible unless a very large decrease in the rate base were made, he stressed that the Public Service Commission was "the only body created by law in the State of New York to settle the rate base," and that the company was now in active negotiation with the commission to establish the figure.

"I sincerely hope," he added, "that the main objective of lower rates and greater use of our electric service will not be delayed or prevented by the confusion of various government agencies created and existing for different purposes, each trying to solve the matter in some different way."

Cites Regulation

Denying the main contentions of the report, Mr. Carlisle held that the authority "utterly ignores the fact that since 1907 . . . the companies have been completely regulated by the State," during which time New York City "has conducted rate proceedings at the cost of many millions of dollars."

"Valuation of property has been made and in each instance the city has completely failed to establish that the rates charged are excessive," he continued. "All questions of excessive valuation and property cost were most thoroughly gone into in these proceedings."

Pilot And Shogun

must not rest on their laurels, but bend every energy to carry the Tokugawa standard to topmost heights. He proceeded alone to Osaka Castle, and his unopposed entrance into the impregnable fortress that had been the nest of his principal foes announced to the entire empire that the battle had been decisive of its fortunes. Perhaps he would have dealt with young Hideyori then and there had he not despised his youth. Besides, the dying Hideyoshi had said: "My son Hideyori is still young—I beg that you will look after him."

When the story of the battle had been pieced together Will demanded of Toku San:

"And what befell Hidetada's army that we saw march so brave across yon bridge?"

The good fellow shook his head dolefully, for he liked the young prince:

"His Excellency arrived too late for the battle, and is in disgrace with his illustrious father."

"What made him late?" inquired Melchior.

"A great fight before the castle of Ueda, which barred his way."

"Hooray!" shouted Will. "The ould Emperour won his battle single-handed! Come, Melchior, we go out to join the lantern marchers!"

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Dixie Written By a Northerner

Daniel Decatur Emmet (1815-1904) was born, died and is buried in Mount Vernon, Ohio. He traveled with one of the earliest negro minstrel troupes and happened to be in New York on a dark and chilly day in 1859. Being requested by a fellow minstrel to write within two days, a "hurray" or "walk-around song", he bethought himself of the popular showman phrase "I wish I was in Dixieland" and composed his tune to this phrase. It became immensely popular. Two years later, after the outbreak of the Civil War, it was played as a closing number at a theatre performance in New Orleans, where it stirred a Southern audience into adopting it as the War Song of the Confederacy. It was first sung officially at the inauguration of Jefferson Davis on February 18, 1861.

Flying Up to Jump Down

Paul Bergling, member of the District of Columbia Air Legion, became the first person on record to jump from a plane the first time he ever rode in one, May 12, 1929. On his second trip in a plane he did the same thing—came down with a parachute. Bergling likes 'chuting and will take a ride in the clouds any time for the sole purpose of jumping out.

A Platinum Wire Twice Around The Earth

Platinum possesses many strange qualities. Under changing conditions it is the hardest and softest of metals. Combined with iridium it is the hardest, but the ductibility of pure platinum is astonishing.

The scientist Wollaston first drew platinum into wire 1/50,000th of an inch thick, and again made by drawing it as fine as possible, coating it with gold, drawing it again and dissolving the gold, recoating, redrawing, etc. This fine wire is invisible to the eye, and is laid in minute squares across the lenses of great telescopes, enabling the astronomer to make extremely delicate measurements.

If only one ounce of platinum were stretched out in the form of such fine wire, it would reach 50,000 miles.

Fingerprinting Barred For Baby-Bond Buyers

Complaints that postmasters in Brooklyn and other Eastern American cities had been insisting that buyers of "baby bonds" be fingerprinted for purposes of identification, caused the U. S. Treasury recently to send out orders that the practice be discontinued.

Postoffice officials explained that buyers of postal savings certificates were fingerprinted under rules of that department, according to the New Times.

The Treasury felt that this was unnecessary in connection with the sale of the new savings bonds, since the bonds are payable only to the owner whose name is written on the bond at the time of purchase.

President's Wife Laughs At Satire

Enjoys Fun, Leads Applause At Newspaper Women's New Deal 'Stunt' Dinner

The Women's National Press Club was host at a dinner on March 5 at at which it satirized the New Deal, Senator Long, the Reedsville Subsistence Homestead Project and the Wednesday "at homes" of Cabinet wives.

Among the 500 guests were Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and the President's mother, Mrs. James Roosevelt; wives of members of his official family and Secretary Perkins. The President's wife led the applause and joined in the fun at her expense as barbs were directed, at her favorite projects, according to the New York Times, article continues.

There was a scene with Emperor Huey I, in a clown's costume, busily issuing proclamations and dictating demands for large appropriations for gold crowds required in his realm of "Every Man a King." To a score of secretaries Emperor Huey I dictated a proclamation for business recovery in which every husband and wife was ordered to take a second honeymoon.

Correspondents Travel-Weary

Again, there was a Rest-Home for Exhausted Newspaperwomen, which Mrs. Roosevelt had endowed. On the wall was a legend: "One bell means Mrs. Roosevelt goes by train; two bells means by plane; three bells means by auto; four bells means on foot."

An exhausted reporter, arriving on crutches, announced that Reedsville sent her there; another explained that she was "ruined" by the Puerto Rico journey, and they both were overcome when from a couch where another lay suffering from travel shock rose a shriek: "Something tells me Mrs. Roosevelt is going some place again."

Whereupon the new inmate said fervently:

"Let us pray the prayer they say that Franklin prays; 'Just one day, God, please make her tired. Just one day!'"

The bells rang five times—an unexpected addition to the code. Mrs. Roosevelt had just shot to Mars in a rocket ship.

In the New Deal dance were Depression, in rags and tatters; Inflation, doing a balloon dance, and "a gimme girl," her eyes on the Treasury. A frantically searching Uncle Sam was chased away to make room for the signer of the Jim Farley stein song. "Where to get jobs, where to get jobs," was the refrain.

bitterly between themselves? Have they not the same high priest, whom they call Pope?"

"Yea," rejoined Will, "and that be the trouble. If your Majesty will have fetched the chart of the world, I can make matters plain."

When a servant had brought the chart Will ran his finger down the Pacific ocean from the North pole to the South.

"The year after the New World was discovered, Your Majesty, the Pope gave everything east of this line to the Portuguese, and everything west to the Spanish, forbidding each to voyage into the other's territory. But in less than thiry years the Spanish admiral, Magellan, circumnavigated the globe and took these islands lying down there to the south of Iapon, naming them after the Spanish king, Philip the Second. They are really in Portingall territory. The Portingalls, from their base in Malaya, came across to Iapon. As you know, they now have their own bishop here, but the Spanish also have one in Manila. These bishops dispute with each other. For fifty years now the Portingalls have also had a big base in China, which they call Macao, and thence they monopolize the China trade. This the Spainyards do not like. To get a foothold here in your realm they are sending their religieux up from Manila. For all such reasons those two peoples quarrel."

"Much of that I know, Anjin. But tell me—by what right does the high priest called Pope claim such universal dominion as to parcel out the world between his Portingalls and Spainyards?"

"He claims the right from heaven, Your Majesty."

There was a touch of derision in the Shogun's smile.

"That I cannot believe. If I believed it, I should expel all his subjects from this realm. Meanwhile I befriend them. Hideyoshi persecuted the 'Kirishitans.' At one time he had six and twenty of them crucified—in their stronghold, at Nagasaki. He thought they were plotting against the realm, and it infuriated him. But less than three months after his death I myself met a Christian priest. He was what you call a Franciscan; a Spanish missioner from Manila, Jerome de Jesus. Having escaped crucifixion at Nagasaki, he had fled back to Manila. But his conscience moved him to return hither secretly. He was arrested and brought to my presence. I asked him how he had managed to escape being crossed. He said his god had delivered him from Hideyoshi's hands so that he might continue to encourage all Japan-men that are Christian. He said that he esteemed not his life; that indeed he cherished the desire to die on the cross like his colleagues, and as his god did ages ago. When I smiled at his zeal he mistook me; thought that I encored. But I said to him: 'Be no longer afraid. No longer conceal yourself, and no longer change your habit, for I wish you well. And as for the Christians who every year pass within sight of the Kwanto on their way to Mexico with the Spanish galleon, I have a keen desire for them to visit the harbors of this land—to refresh themselves here—to take what they wish—to trade with my vassals—to teach them how to develop our silver mines and how to build ships.' I provided Jerome de Jesus with a house here in Yedo, as I did you. I let him build here the first Christian church, where he has some disciples. With his aid and advice, I sent three different embassies to the Philippines, proposing reciprocal trade, offering to open ports to them in the Kwanto, and asking for naval architects. None came. They sent only more missioners. What think you of our native ship-building?"

"Your shipwrights are marvellous craftsmen, your Majesty, but they build only junks. If you wish ships that can sail the seven seas your first need is a much larger yard than any here."

"That is true. When it seemed that Spanish architects might come I had my Admiral of the Sea look into the matter. He found an ideal site for a yard at Ito, at the mouth of the Hot Springs River, down on the Izu Peninsula. He is away, as you know."

Then, as if changing the subject,

"It was painful to me to deny to your fellows that old hulk the Charity to venture out in on their homeward voyage. She was not seaworthy."

"I fear not," the pilot had to confess. "And as for them, after they mutinied I lost my love for them. I think it was well to distribute what remained of your gift and let them go whither they would within the Empire. I miss only Melchior."

"He and others are on the island of Hirado in the south, helping its canny daimyo to pour shot and mould cannon and learn the art of artillery, in which I am told the Dutchman excel. Matsu-ura, like you, seems chary of the Portuguese."

"Then he is wise indeed—wiser, I think, than Your Majesty."

"That is as may be," smiled the Shogun. "Anyhow I like you to speak your mind. Now let us get back to our ship-building. Do you go down to the place I spoke of and look it over. If your judgment confirms the Admiral's, build there a yard that can turn me out a small ship—say eighty tons burden—of European style. If that be good, we may perhaps make a larger. You shall have money and men as needed."

The pilot, secretly uplifted and excited, protested in his best Japonian manner his lack of skill.

"Well, do your endeavour," said Iyeyasu, in high good humour. "If it be not good, it is no matter. Now do you go to Ito."

So Will went, saw, and conquered. The site was indeed ideal, and labor and materials were his to command. He threw a temporary dam across the mouth of the little river, took troops of trained shipwrights down Yedo, and in an astonishingly short time had his ship ready for launching. Then the dam was knocked out from before her, and the first of Japan's "modern" ships slid down the ways without mishap, ready to stand out to sea.

'Miracle' Changes Silver To Cadmium

Spectators At M. I. T. Both See And Hear A Transmutation Of Metals

Before a crowd which thronged a Massachusetts Institute of Technology lecture room in Cambridge, Mass., on March 10, silver was changed to cadmium and those who witnessed the scientific miracle not only saw but heard it performed.

They witnessed, in addition, production of 1,200,000 volts of electricity, the highest direct voltage ever generated in a lecture room demonstration, and saw this violet voltage, under simulated electrical storm conditions, flash its way through a toy village, says the New York Times.

They saw, too, proof of a lightning rod's efficacy to attract such voltage under storm conditions and listened enthralled as the Geiger Counter, popularly known as the cosmic ray trap, not only thumped off its record of such errant cosmic rays as fell from time to time on the lecture room, but registered explosions that accompanied the transmutation of silver into cadmium. The energy involved in these transmutations, incidentally, was millions of times as great per atom as that for each atom of exploding nitroglycerin.

Rare Film of a Phenomenon

They saw, besides, a motion picture of one of science's most rarely photographed phenomena—tracks of atomic nuclei, flying across the screen at a rate of 20,000 miles a second, so small that a breath of the projected track had to be magnified a million million times to make them visible.

Practically all of the demonstration which accompanied the Society of Art lecture, given by Dr. Robert J. van de Graaff, youthful Associate Professor of Physics and research expert into atomic structure, was presented before a popular audience for the first time.

While the generation of the high voltage electricity, with its violent thunderbolts, probably provided more thrills than any other feature of the program, it was the transmutation of silver that proved of greatest scientific interest.

Professor van de Graaff employed a radium emanation to produce the artificial radio activity necessary for the experiment. From the radium, brought especially by airplane from New York City for today's experiment, alpha particles were made to strike the metallic element berryllium, causing it to emit neutrons which, upon striking a silver cylinder, made the latter artificially radio-active.

Twenty seconds later, yielding to the neutronic bombardment, silver atoms were transmuted into the metal cadmium and the atomic explosion which accompanied the change was distinctly heard, amplified millions of times, on the Geiger Counter.

The high voltage display was put on in darkness. The audence gaspedas the electricity first played about the big aluminum sphere on which it was stored. Weird violet tongues licked the sides of the balls, a violet corona played fitfully about them, then ponderous volts of electricity leaped from sphere to sphere.

A little later the toy village, placed on a table beneath one of the spheres, caught a rain of volts on steeples and ridge poles.

Dr. Van de Graaff, who came to Technology from Princeton University, is the designer of the giant generators used at the institute's Round Hill experimental station, where, in November, 1933, more than 7,000,000 volts, the highest direct voltage ever generated up to that time, were produced.

Subsequently, the same machine which ultimately will be used as one of science's chief instruments in its endless quest for a greater knowledge of the atomic structure, proved its capacity for generating 10,000,000 volts.

Cadmium is a tin-white, malleable ductile metal, occurring in the rather rare mineral Greenockite and also in small amounts of ore of zinc. It was discovered in 1817. It is used in making fusible alloys, as an amalgam for filling teeth and in electroplating.

A Miraculous Shot

In March 1922 Sergeants Fred Tapscott and James McCarthy of the Chicago Police, entered a speakeasy at 31st and Cottage Grove Avenue, Chicago, encountering one William Webb, a notorious escaped convict. McCarthy ordered Webb to throw up his hands, but instead the convict whipped out his pistol, trigger cocked, and tried to shoot. But he was not quite quick enough. Sgt. Tapscott blazed away and his bullet found its mark directly in the barrel of Webb's gun, knocking it from his hand.

For his quick and effective work Tapscott received numerous awards from the newspapers of Chicago citizens, and the Department, as well as Creditable Mention on the official Police Department records.

PENWOMEN HEAR TALK OF SHRINES

Mrs. Mabel Ogilvie gave an informative address on literary and historical shrines in and around Tokyo at the regular meeting of the Tokyo Branch of the National League of American Penwomen Saturday afternoon.

The meeting was held at the home of Miss Gertrude Wellington who entertained the members and guests at a tea following the meeting. Miss Wellington was assisted by Miss Sally Ibisen.

Mrs. Ogilvie stressed the existing land marks of old Japan in and near Tokyo in her talk on shrines. Speaking of the Shogakuji temple near Naka Meguro station, she said:

"If you follow the little path in the compound and pass under a wooden archway you will find yourself in an old Japanese cemetery. It is not very large and the graves seem to be quite ordinary. There is however one grave among them that is anything but ordinary and that is the grave of Masaoka, one of the outstanding women of Japan—the faithful nurse of Tsuruchiyo who sacrificed her own child in order to save the life of the young son of her Lord. Most of you have probably seen the play on the stage at Kabuki.

"There is a granite fence around Masaoka's grave and a granite torii in front with heavy stone doors. Flowers are always blooming in bamboo containers in front of the monument and a fragrant incense scents the air, put there by devoted admirers of this heroic woman's sacrifice.

"Opposite Masaoka's grave is the grave of her husband much smaller and less pretentious than his wife's. This is one of those rare instances where the wife has a larger and more imposing place than her husband.

"There has quite recently been added in the compound a very beautiful figure in bronze, of Masaoka. She is standing in ceremonial robes, her eyes looking down and the expression on her face is one of extreme sadness, such as she might have looked on the night of the death of her son."

Mrs. Ogilvie also described the grave of the romantic lovers, Gompachi and Komurasaki whom she termed the Romeo and Juliet of Japan and told the exciting story of their romance. She said this grave is about ten minutes walk from the Shogakuji temple, just off the wide road from Meguro station and a narrow, winding road leads to it.

Speaking of the Fudo temple which is a little further along the road on which is the tomb of Gompachi and Komurasaki, Mrs. Ogilvie declared:

"This temple is supposed to have been founded by Jigaku Daishi in 808 in consequence of a dream which he had while passing the night here on his way to the capital from his native province of Shimotsuke. On the following day he drew a rough likeness of the god who had appeared to him in his dream and afterwards carved a wooden image from it. In 1624 the temple was restored by the third Shogun Iyemitsu.

"As we enter the gateway from the street, we find ourselves in a large spacious court. The path leading to the temple steps is lined with all kinds of little stalls selling candies and toys for children. On the right hand side of the court yard is a large pool of water in a railed enclosure. Tradition says that Jigaku Daishi, the founder of the temple, miraculously called the spring into existence by the aid of his mace. During the coldest part of the winter, people come to this pool and for purification purposes, they stand under one of these dragon heads and let the icy water pour over their naked forms. The compensation for this Spartan ordeal is absolution for any sin or sins that may have been committed. It is also considered efficacious for mental ailments.

"A few yeards from the pool is a large pine tree, its branches forming a canopy over a large stone monument. This tree is a successor to one that was planted by the Shogun Iyemitsu who was specially fond of visiting this temple. The large stone tablet commemorates his connection with the temple.

"On the left hand side of the compound is another stone monument covered with characters. This was erected to the memory of Konyo Aoki who introduced the sweet potato to Japan. And just behind the temple there is a graveyard and in this Konyo Aoki is buried. The tombstone bears the quaint inscription 'The Tomb of Professor Sweet Potato.'

"During the famine of 1735, Aoki introduced sweet potatoes from the Loochoo islands, and thus considerably helped to lighten the sufferings of the people.

"At the foot of the stone steps leading to the temple is a stone image of a fox playing with three puppies. A few yards away is an impressive bronze lantern presented by the firemen of the district. Three small bronze Buddhas of very pleasing aspect jut out from three sides of the lantern. Replicas of implements used by the firemen are cut out in metal at the base of the lantern the whole structure of which is about 10 to 12 feet in height.

"Mounting a few steps from the courtyard, one comes to a cavelike enclosure flanked by rough volcanic rocks. This contains the bronze image of Eno Gyoja who lived during the reign of 697 to 707 and who was a famous pilgrim moutaineer. To him is accredited the honor of being the first person to climb Mt. Fuji. There are many pairs of sandals ranging in size from a child's to that of a veritable giant, given as votive offerings to the spirit of this intrepid climber of so many centuries ago, in the hope that some of his strength and hardihood will be given to them to achieve feats of climbing the mountains of Japan.

"Dotted here and there among the volcanic rock are stone tablets with characters on them. On Matsuri days there is a long curtain suspended from the temple to the torii at the foot of the steps. If you walk under this curtain, you will come under the protection of the deity of the temple," Mrs. Ogilvie concluded.

Dr. Benes Accepts Moscow Invitation

To See Litvinoff After Stresa Parley

MOSCOW, April 5—Dr. Edouard Benes, Foreign Minister of Czechoslovakia, has consented to visit Moscow in response to an invitation sent by Soviet Foreign Commissar Maxim Litvinoff, it was authoritatively learned here today.

Though no definite date for Dr. Benes's objected visit has been published, it is believed certain not to materialize until after the forthcoming Anglo-French-Italian conference at Stresa and the extraordinary session of the League Council.

Well-informed quarters anticipate that Dr. Benes will come to Moscow simultaneously with French Foreign Minister Pierre Laval, who is also scheduled to visit the Soviet capital after the Stresa and Geneva meetings.

Political circles here attach considerable significance to the visit of the Czechoslovak Minister in view of recent rumors of a military alliance between France, Soviet Russia and Czechoslovakia.

Wallace Assailed By Cotton Official

Secretary Held Unable To Understand Problems

Nippon Dempo-United Press

BOSTON, April 3—Mr. Dexter, vice president of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, today characterized as "vicious" the statement that manufacturers were using the processing tax as an alibi to cover their periodic over-production.

Mr. Stevens said the processing tax applied to mills that are not making a profit. The statement is fresh evidence of Secretary Wallace's inability or unwillingness to understand the problems of the industry, Mr. Stevens said.

Morgenthau Aids NY In Power Row

Treasury Head Confers With Mayor On Erection Of Private Plants

Just how far the Federal authorities are willing to go to assist the La Guardia administration in its drive for lower electric rates for the city and for private consumers remained uncertain on March 9 after a long conference of Federal, State and city officials with Henry Morgenthau Jr., Secretary of the Treasury.

Mayor La Guardia headed the city delegation, which also included Maurice P. Davidson, Commissioner of Water, Gas and Electricity, and Corporation Counsel Paul Windels. Frank P. Walsh, chairman of the State Power Authority; Basil Manley, chairman of the Federal Power Commission; Rear Admiral Reuben E. Bakenhus, Public Works officer for the Third Naval District, and Herman Oliphant, general counsel for the Treasury Department, were also present, according to the New York Times.

Mr. Morgenthau said the conferees had discussed, among other matters, the recent proposals made to the government and the city by electrict subsidiaries of the Consolidated Gas System for substantially lower rates for building and street lighting. It was indicated that neither the city nor the Treasury Department had decided whether the offers should be accepted.

Conferences to Continue

"I came to New York primarily to be on the ground for a personal study of the joint problem of power and electricity," he said. "I wanted to make a study of the technical and financial aspects. We discussed the entire question and further conferences will be held here or in Washington."

Neither Mr. Morgenthau nor others at the conference would indicate whether the goverment and the city were prepared to construct their own electric plants, regardless of whether the eletric companies were willing to make satisfactory rate cuts in contracts now being negotiated.

Mayor La Guardia has intimated, however, that the city will go ahead with its construction program even if it should, for the time being, make a new service contract with the New York Edison Company.

Mr. Davidson and Mr. Walsh, speaking at a luncheon of the City Affairs Commiittee in the Hotel Commodore after they had left the conference, urged the establishment of municipal electric plants as the most effective method of reducing rates.

Mr. Davidson declared a report of Mayor La Guardia's special engineering board, soon to be submitted to the Board of Estimate, would provide for an initial installation consisting of three steam generating plants and one Diesel engine plant, all connected by transmission cables and serving the six load centers described in his recent announcement to the public.

The plants would be used, he said, to provide lighting for public buildings and streets, but would be capable of expansion to meet requirements of private consumers if the city enlarged its power policy to include that field.

Past experience with public utility companies had demonstrated, Mr. Davidson declared, that "the erection by the city of a municipal yardstick plant is an irreducible minimum of safety against continued or future aggression and injustice." The haste with which the Consolidated System companies had offered to lower electric rates, he said, proved that their greatest fear was in competition through municipal operation.

Walsh Urges City Plants

Mr. Walsh, going far beyond the recommendations offered by Mr. Davidson, urged immediate construction of municipal electric power and lighting plants, to serve not only the city but also private consumers.

Because of the almost complete failure of regulation by the Public Service Commission to curb the rates and financial malpractices of public utilities, he declared, the weapon of public ownership and operation must be employed if governmental agencies were to win out in the "irreconcilable conflict" that must end with complete victory for either the public or the companies and their financial backers.

In New York, Mr. Walsh declared, municipal operation was especially advisable because more than 1,100,000 horsepower would be made available for generating electricity soon after ratification of the St. Lawrence waterways treaty. This, he said, would reduce largely the cost of a municipal plant.

It was especially important, in his opinion, that municipal power plant operation be undertaken here because the widespread power program of the Federal Government recognized that in New York State and New York City were to be found the principal strongholds of the private power giants.

The men responsible for the evils connected with the holding company system of managing public utilities, Mr. Walsh declared, could properly be described as "public enemies." He dwelt upon their "rapacity" and their "desire to enhance their personal fortunes at the expense of both the consumer of electricity and the small stockowners of their own companies."

The Odyssey of a Needle

When Mrs. Marian Lindley, who now lives in Springdale, Ark., was a girl of nine she accidentally swallowed a sewing needle while working on doll's clothes. Mrs. Lindley is now using the needle again after its 36-year interment. According to the doctor the needle had been imbedded in the fleshy part of her body causing her no pain whatever.

AMERICAN WOMEN'S LUNCHEON

Personal experiences were exchanged in extemperaneous talks at the luncheon for American women in Tokyo at the American club Monday noon.

The luncheon was attended by a large number of representative women who were seated at three long tables decorated with bowls of spring flowers. Mrs. Edwin L. Neville who presided, explained that the luncheon was one of a series started last year by the American Association as a sideline. She proposed that speakers whom she would call on, give brief accounts of the little things they are doing outside of general routine, that give them pleasure.

Mrs. Neville explained that she herself enjoyed collecting the proverbs and sayings which are found over Japanese doorways. She quoted several and explained that in several which she had found, the individual could supply his own meaning.

One of the speakers was Mrs. Thomas Munro, a guest, who is in Tokyo with her husband. Dr. Monro, educational director of the Cleveland Museum of Art. Mrs. Munro explained that she and her husband spend three or four months of each year travelling in some other country. They study the cultural background of the country but they are also very interested in the life of the people. In Japan, they have been very busy, seeing the Kabuki and the Noh dances and other things.

Speaking of first impressions, Mrs. Munro said she was perfectly amazed at the way Japanese mothers discipline their children without punishment

Mrs. Harold Doud, wife of one of the United States army language students, spoke of her experiences in rural districts of Japan. She and her husband recently returned from visits in Shizuoka and Kanazawa.

Mrs. William G. Hillen told of the joy she derived from the study of Japanese bonkei and bonseki. Mrs. William Chamberlin, wife of the Christian Science Monitor correspondent, described the difficulties of house hunting in Moscow. Mrs. Harold C. Amos, wife of the principal of the American School, recalled her enjoyment of Baguio, Philippines, where her husband was formerly principal.

Miss Ruth Thompson gave an entertaining account of her experiences in Japan during the Meiji era. At that time, the staff of the American Embassy consisted of three persons, the minister, the secretary, and the interpreter who was Miss Thompson's father.

Others introduced were Mrs. L. E. Butler, Mrs. E. Watts, Mrs. John Weckerling, and Mrs. Young.

TOKYO WOMEN'S CLUB

Disagreeing with preachers, priests and prophets who call vanity the deadliest of deadly sins, Mr. A. F. Thomas declared that vanity is the greatest of all cardinal virtues in an address before the Tokyo Women's club at the Y.W.C.A. Monday afternoon.

Mr. Thomas spoke on "Quaint Epitaphs, Literary and Otherwise; Their Philosophy and Humor," and his address was marked by abundant illustration which kept his audience highly entertained.

"Have you ever realized that there could be no progress in the world without vanity?" Mr. Thomas asked. "It is vanity that gets things done in life, that gives us the incentive to learn. It is the incentive to do good, to gain power by knowledge. Vanity alone makes us react to life's challenge," he continued.

"Preachers are particularly vociferous in denouncing vanity in the ladies but they are all wrong. A lady without vanity is a mere frump. What a drab world it would be were there no vanity among the ladies! Frankly, it is vanity that makes you all appear at your best. Is that a crime? A thousand times no!

"Epitaphs proceed also from vanity but of a different variety perhaps, yet all from that desire to remain young or alive, indispensable to society. Epitaphs spring from the same type of vanity as that which causes people to write books. It is the desire to see their name go on even after they are dead that causes men and women to write books. It is the same vanity that explains the parental instinct. Were it not for the instinctive desire to perpetuate something of ourselves, the race would die.

"We wish to perpetuate our name. This I believe, is the real reason why daughters are unwelcome—they change it. What can flatter us more than when friends say, 'How much he resembles his daddy!' We parents, if we are honest with ourselves, know that nothing pleases us more than to feel that our children are replicas of ourselves, even to our vices," Mr. Thomas declared.

He said that epitaphs are associated with the same vanity—the desire to live beyond the grave.

Mr. Thomas then aimed a blow at Christianity for its failure to take away the fear of death. If the faith in an everlasting life were real, Christians would have no need to tell the world about it on their gravestones, he said. He contrasted the so called pagan and Christian when confronted by death, remarking on the stoical attitude of the former and the weeping, wailing and gashing of teeth of the latter whose Christian religion is based on "I am the Resurrection and the Life" which passage is also the first in the Christian funeral service, he said.

He also decried the competition among Christians to erect the largest gravestones, which he described as a means of carrying on social snobbery even after death.

"From the evidence of so many epitaphs in Christian cemeteries it is certain that it is a bargaining with God that is responsible for a great many epitaphs. The idea is that works of charity on earth will be repaid to thousand-fold after death. Some epitaphs remind God that the deceased has paid his bill and expects God to give him the commission."

It was with this group which "Bargain with God" and which he termed the fire insurance kind, that Mr. Thomas began reading epitaphs. Among the illustrations from this group was:

"Here are interred the remains of Mrs. Ann Floyer, died 8th May 1823. God hath chosen her to be a pattern to the other angels."

Speaking of advertising epitaphs, Mr. Thomas cited the following:

"Here lies I and my three daughters,
Killed by drinking the Cheltenham waters,
If we had stuck to our Epsom Salts.
We'd not been a'lying in these here vaults."

Social and snobbish epitaphs were illustrated by the following:

"Here lies the body of Lady O'Looney, Great niece of Burke, commonly called the 'Sublime.' She was bland, passionate, and deeply religious. Also, she painted in water colors and sent several pictures to the exhibition. She was first cousin to Lady Jones, and of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Illustrating professional epitaphs, Mr. Thomas recalled one from the grave of an auctioneer—"Going. . Going. . . Gone"

Speaking of quaint and ambiguous epitaphs, the speaker recited this one:

"Sacred to the memory of Ebenezer Harvey, who died through being accidentally kicked by a cow on the 18th of September 1853. Well done thou good and faithful servant."

Of the Jiggs and Maggie brand, Mr. Thomas quoted from a grave in a London cemetery:

"Beneath this silent Tomb is laid
A noisy, antiquated maid,
Who from her cradle talked till death
And ne'er before was out of breath."

Mr. Thomas concluded his lecture with Henry James' opinion of life, "Life is the predicament that preceeds death."

Barbara Hutton To Get Divorce From Mdivani

Heiress' Lawyer Instructed To Take Steps For Decree In Reno

Barbara Hutton Mdivani, the former Woolworth heiress, has instructed her New York lawyer, Millard Fillmore Tompkins, to take preliminary steps toward obtaining for her a divorce in Reno from Alexis Mdivani, say the New York Herald Tribune. They were married in Paris on June 20, 1933.

She revealed her decision in an interview in her suite at the Dorchester Hotel in London on March 16.

"Alec and I," she said, "have definitely agreed to part . . . But only legally. I mean by that, as a result of this decision we today are greater friends than ever and intend always to remain so.

"The fact is, we have the greatest mutual affection and respect and always did have, even if we may occasionally have disagreed, as most people must at some time or another in their lives. Although we always were and will be the sincerest of friends, we are not suited to live with one another.

"Alec to me is one of the finest men I have ever known. He always said his only object in life was to see me happy. He promised that if for some reason I was not happy with him all I had to do was to say so and he would immediately give me my freedom. In my opinion, no man could be more noble."

The former Miss Hutton came here from Paris a few days ago. Her husband saw her to the train in Paris and then departed for Spain. The United Press reached him today by telephone at his sister's house in Catalonia.

"Barbara is the most marvelous person I have ever met," he said. "I am terribly sorry our marriage was not a success. It is my earnest wish that she will always be happy. I am certain we will always remain the greatest of friends."

His wife took the telephone and read to him the context of her interview. Mdivani then said to the correspondent: "You can say I agree with every word she said."

His wife, wearing a magenta and gold tea gown, said she was sailing for New York on the Bremen next Saturday. She said she had no plans except for a business trip to the United States, after which she would return to London for a prolonged stay.

"God, how I wish people would leave me alone," she said. "I hate the everlasting publicity, just because I have money. After all, I am a girl like any other girl. Why can't I be left alone to live my life without constant reference to my actions?

"I have now made my decision to get a divorce. All I want to do is to continue writing poetry. Writing is my hobby. I love it."

G. Schirmer, Inc., music publishers of New York, disclosed this with that they would soon put on sale two love melodies and a trilogy of Oriental songs composed by the Woolworth heiress. The words are by the former Miss Hutton, the music by Elsa Maxwell, New York Social Registerite. They will be given their premier performance by Lawrence Tibbett, American barytone.

Married Not Two Years Ago

The $42,000,000 Woolworth heiress was married into the much-married Mdivani family on June 20, 1933, in Paris. Before the ceremony Miss Hutton told interviewers the dashing Georgian had won her heart because, unlike American business men, he had the leisure to devote himself to his wife. Afterward he applied himself so assiduously to sport that the princess confided to friends she was afraid she had become a "polo widow."

In the fall of 1933 the couple began a world tour. There was quite a to-do on the Pacific Coast when the heiress arrived minus her Georgian spouse. She denied there had been a marital rift. Tending to corroborate her was his sudden appearance in Seattle, where he boarded a liner which took him to Shanghai.

In the spring passengers aboard the Mdivani's ship reported they quarreled frequently. Four months later she was taken to a London nursing home suffering from what intimates described as "husband trouble."

In that same month—June—her father, Franklin Hutton, sped from New York to London to bring his daughter back to America. She did not return and it was indicated that a reconciliation had been effected.

The next episode was when Mdivani, divorced husband of the American Louisa Van Alen, turned again to polo and announced he was sailing for India. He said he hoped his wife would accompany him, but instead she came home.

Parents and Lawyer Out of Town

Mr. and Mrs. Franklyn Hutton, of 1020 Fifth Avenue, the parents of Princess Mdivani, were reported last night to be sojourning in the South, as was her lawyer, Millard Fillmore Tompkins, of 116 John Street.

Pilot And Shogun

request by his only unmarried daughter, and that her decision was reached in consequence of a meeting with you on the beach at Uraga."

"We spoke not a word!" exclaimed Will. "Your Majesty is right in adjudging the young women of this land overbold!"

Iyeyasu smiled. "Then we agree? I am glad. I take it you would not object to my providing the go-between? Your can trust me. Am I not your best friend?"

"By God, yes!" exploded the pilot in English, and then outpoured his heart in his politest Japonian. Somehow this offer of a purely personal service from the mighty aristocrat touched him as much as any kindness Iyeyasu had ever done him.

Always quick to follow up an advantage, Iyeyasu hurried on—

"What time would you suggest for the wedding?"

"But—"

This was as far as Will got. His mind checked him. He sat in deep thought, his hands pressed to the sides of his head. Presently he placed them back upon his knees and said very earnestly and solemnly:

"Your Majesty, I have pondered this matter now for months. Your own point of view of course carries great weight. I acknowledge also that I am deeply moved by the message the young lady's father has brought to you. And I do not think I succeeded in concealing from you at the outset that she engages my interest. What held me back was my conscience and my creed. I have studied the latter carefully for light in the Sutra that we call the Bible. One sacred text runs often through my mind: 'It is better to marry than to burn.'"

Iyeyasu inclined his head slightly. He seemed to be having some trouble with the control of his facial muscles—a most unusual phenomenon. But he said, very sedately:

"That is a high wosdom."

"If Your Majesty think so too," blurted out the pilot, "marry I will! And the sooner the better!"

"Well spoken, Anjin! Now you are a Japan-man in truth!" . . .

On the journey up to Yedo to get the trading-pass Melchior was so overjoyed with his luck that Will did not broach the subject of nuptials, but gave the Dutchman his head. They lodged at the house in Pilot Street. When Will sallied out to the castle he observed events and got full proof of the fact that "the ould Emperour" still ruled. Iyeyasu's personal seal on the little memorandum was an Open Sesame, and "the young Emperour"—as Will ever afterward called Hidetada—received him graciously. When he returned to Pilot Street in the evening with the broad seal of officialdom Melchior got properly drunk. Next morning as he lay in bed nursing himself nothing would do but Will must tell him of the palace and the prince.

"It is on such a vast scale," said the pilot, "that from its entrance onward to the throne-rrom I passed all of five thousand courtiers and servitors, standing about as if in daily attendance. The first apartment I entered is entirely covered with rich ornaments: carpets, stuffs, velvet, gold. Each apartment thereafter seemed to me to exceed the preceding ones in splendour, till at last I reached that in which the young Emperour sate—on a grand carpet of crimson velvet, all embroidered o'er with gold, and laid upon a kind of alcove, raised two steps, in the center of the room."

"En the young Emperour—how looks he?"

"Proud and stern. He wore a gree and yellow surtout over two of the vests called kimono, and a girdle in which were stuck his dagger, while a page sat behind him holding his sword. His hair was tied up with ribbons of different colours, without any other ornament on his head. He seems about thirty five-years old, of a brown complexion, even for a Japonian—of pleasing figure, and a good height."

"Long live the ould Emperour!" exclaimed Melchior, piously, and Will added a fervent "Amen." Him they knew, but this new Shogun was an unknown quantity, who, if his father died, would become the absolute master of Japan.

When they had finished discussing royalty, Will told of the nuptial plans afoot, whereupon Melchior hugged him, demanded more saké, and again got drunk.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Unique Bridge

Over the Cimarron River in Western Kansas is a strange bridge, which is apparently just a viaduct over a shallow dry valley. But it really bridges the river which is 40 feet under neath the surface, and the bridge itself is built on the roof of the river underground. Rising in the mountains of eastern Colorado, the Cimarron tumbles down through narrow channels until, near Garden City, Kansas, it disappears from view for a distance of 20 miles. Melting snows and spring rains cause the underground river to overflow, which is the only time the highway bridge crosses any water.

The Surprise of a Glob-Trotter

If a man 6 feet tall were to walk around the earth on the equator, his head would describe a circle, whose radius would be 6 feet longer than the radius of the earth. The circumference of the circle described by his head would therefore exceed the circumference of the earth described by his feet by less than 38 feet, consisting of 2x6x3. 1416 (value of Pi). In view of the great dimensions of the earth's diameter this is a verp surprising result.

Relief In U.S. At Peak; 22,375,000 On Rolls

The Federal relief population on March 5 reached a record high of 22,375,000, as Harry L. Hopkins pushed efforts in Washington D. C. to increase contributions from States and communities.

Relief officials estimated that 5,400,000 families, averaging four to a family, and 775,000 single persons were on relief, says the New York Times.

Funds were withheld from one State, Arkansas, pending compliance with the relief administration's requirements that it put up $1,500,000 during the coming year.

Grants for the first fifteen days of March, including special activities except rural rehabilitation for the entire month, totaled $62,518,411 for forty-two States.

Roosevelts Go On Picnic On 30th Wedding Day

President and Mrs. Roosevelt celebrated their thirtieth wedding anniversary on March 17 with a simple picnic in the country on what was a beautiful Spring-like day.

Shortly after noon, the President and his wife, with their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. John Boettiger, and grand-children, Buzzie and Sistie Dall, motored down the Maryland side of the Potomac, according to the New York Times. With no particular program and no special place to stop, they halted by the road-side and enjoyed a lunch from well-filled baskets.

In the evening he dined quietly with Mrs. Roosevelt, the Boettigers, Frederic Delano, his uncle, and Mrs. Dora Forbes, his aunt.

All of the stamps were ungummed and imperforate, just as they came from the presses at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Illinois Gives Up Fight On Insulls

State Moves To Nol Pros Last Case Against Brothers; Three Cases Tried

Illinois will move on March 18 to nol pros the remaining embezzlement case against Samuel and Martin Insull in the Cook County Criminal Court. This action is believed to mark the end of all prosecutions of the brothers in connection with the collapse of the Insull utility empire, according to the March 17 issue of New York Times.

The article continues:

A Federal indictment against the brothers, Samuel Insull Jr. and seven of their former associates, charging bankruptcy fraud, is still pending in the Federal District Court, but it has been reported at various times in Washington that the government was preparing to abandon this, in view of the acquittal of Samuel Insull and sixteen other defendants in a mail fraud trial last Nov. 24.

Martin Insull, under the terms of his extradition from Canada, could not be tried in the bankruptcy case.

At Attorney General Cummings's office in Washington it was said that a report was awaited from Dwight H. Green, Federal attorney, in Chicago. Mr. Green would make no comment here today.

Thomas J. Courtney, State Attorney, announced his intention to nol pros the embezzlement charge after a conference with assistants who prosecuted Samuel Insull in another embezzlement case which brought acquittal recently.

"In view of the acquittal of the Insulls on these charges," Mr. Courtney said after the conference, "and because of the fact that evidence similar to that in the pending case has been passed on by the juries in the recent trials, I do not believe we could obtain a conviction if we went ahead.

"Therefore, I have instructed my assistants to move for the nol pros."

After this action Martin Insull, who is a British subject, will be turned over to the government for deportation to Canada, where he plans to enter business.

Samuel Insull, an American citizen, is said to be ready to enter business in this country in an advisory capacity.

With the brothers virtually assured of going free, Federal and State authorities look back on nearly three years of futile effort to put them behind bars.

The juries in the three cases which were tried were of the belief that the Insulls and their associates might have been guilty of bad judgment in their efforts to stave off the failure of their utility empire, but found no evidence of wilful wrongdoing.

Virgin Isles Torn By Intense Feud

convinced is not capable of being Governor of the islands, but it is true also, though perhaps to a lesser degree, of the administration.

Because of the attack upon him, Governor Pearson has been forced to spend more time defending the administration daily. At Government House, on a hill high above the beautiful harbor of St. Thomas, several clerks are kept busy blue-pencilling favorable stories in pro-administration newspapers and preparing copies of these papers for mailing to the United States.

In the town itself, in the market place with its yams, papayas, charcoal and bananas, in the backgroom of Paiewonsky's drug store, the meeting place of the opposition, in the hotels and in residences men and women spend much of their time in talk or work against the Pearson regime. The fever is a well-nigh universal contagion.

Because of the bitterness of the feud the pleasant and peaceful social life of St. Thomas has been largely disrupted. Men have been expelled from the Tennis Club, allegedly because of their political views, and others have lost their jobs. There have been minor riots, personal assaults and open denunciations of all and sundry. Fear, suspicion and hatred are real here, despite the surface calm and apparently somnolent quiet of this one-time pirate rendezvous.

Until strangers are known and identified, the men are guarded in their statements or do not talk. There is an efficient underground espionage system, say residents, both government and anti-government, and if one is discreet one does not talk too much.

Whether or not this is true, it is certain that many of the islanders believe it is true, so it is easily understandable what effect such a belief has on 22,000 credulous, semi-primitive people cooped up on islands totaling only 140 square miles.

It is probably because there is a universal vague desire to end the strain, tension, fear and passion of the last two years that almost every one apparently desires a Congressional investigation. If one is voted it should do much to clear up the present muddled situation, residents believe. If not, the present tension may be heightened, or, though it is unlikely, the opposition may dog down or resign itself to the supreme authority of Governor Pearson's mighty "obeah."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Monitor Was Owned by a Swede

Before the United States awarded the formal contract for the construction of the "Monitor" the Naval Board insisted on inserting a clause guaranteeing complete success of the battery. ("The Government cannot consent to receive the vessel, until she shall have been tested for 90 days as proposed"). In case she proved a failure the Government was to be refunded the amount advanced on construction. The contract price was $275,000, of which $68,750 was not paid until March 14, 1862, that is, 5 days after the famous engagement with the Merrimac (rechristened "Virginia").

The "Monitor" was built at Greenpoint, Long Island from designs by and under direction of John Ericson. It was launched January 30, 1862. On March 6th, it started for Hampton Roads, where it arrived on March 8th, just in time to engage the Merrimac the next morning. This engagement was the most important and decisive in naval history, but the United States did not own the vessel outright until 5 days later.

Valentine's Day

Valentine's Day was originally Gallantine's Day. A "Valentine" was a young man or woman betrothed on the first Sunday in Lent. According to ancient rural custom, the betrothal was to be annulled if the man failed to give the young woman a present or entertainment before mid-Lent. The word "valentine" is a variation of the word gallant, gallantine, meaning a "dashing, bold lover."

Reich Industry Rallies To Aid Of German Govt.

Manufacturers, Reassured By Hitler's Power, Gaining Confidence In Regime

In conversations held recently by Anne O'Hare McCormick, New York Times correspondent and German manufacturers, ranging in importance from a small Bavarian tanner to Carl von Weinberg, director at Frankturt am-main of the greatest and most prosperous German corporation, the I. G. Farbenindustrie, the same points were repeated so often that they are worth summarizing as representative of the industrialists' attitude toward the new Reich regime.

In general these manufacturers date from the pre-war period. Few are National Socialists. They declared they had nothing to do with the revolution and were not among the forces that swept Chancellor Adolf Hitler to power. For while the Fuehrer's rise was aided by industrialists, monarchists, junkers and conservatives of all kinds two years ago, even last year these groups were uneasy, reserved and confused behind a transparent mask of optimism.

The line taken today is significant of the process or reconversion. Evidently they have been reassured by the development of government policies and Chancellor Hitler's ability to maintain control of the party.

Belong to "Old Gang"

"We belong to what Americans would call the 'old gang,'" said one. "We supported war and a policy of fulfillment. Now the new crowd has grown up with no use for our ideas and no desire for our advice. This Germany proves herself right by being believed when she refuses to take more punishment. The Reich is like a steamroller. There is no use in getting in front. The only way of exercising the slightest control over the course is to get behind."

While the new controls are stressed it is invariably pointed out, however, that of the three pillars on which the Third Reich rests—the army, the party and the Reichsbank—two are not new. The dictatorial role in the national economy played by Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, Economics Minister, gives great comfort to the representatives of industry. Where bricks must be made without straw, they feel he will wrest whatever advantages can be obtained for Germany from the present precarious financial situation.

Nothing better has illustrated the prestige of the Reichswehr than the astonishing reaction of the average conservative German to the purge of last June. Although the whole grisly episode and its causes are still shrouded in mystery in this country, doubtedly it strengthened rather than weakened Herr Hitler's position, because it has been interpreted not only as a party cleansing but a restoration of the power of the regular army against the will of the irregulars among the Brown troops.

The party itself is viewed by industrial leaders as a force fo welding the nation together.

Must Fall In ine

"What we like or dislike does not matter," they chorus. "You cannot take or leave it, accept one part and reject another. There it is. The racial complex is a fundamental element. Mistakes of policy are part of the heat and high tension making the movement go."

Two factors influence the attitude of industry. The first is that the government is the best customer, and the industrialists are convinced the regime will last many years. In district after district factories are kept humming, either by government orders for uniforms, leather boots, airplane parts, munitions machinery, materials, public works, etc., or by private orders stimulated by government pressure behind building, remodeling and repair operations everywhere in process.

The more exchange difficulties dam foreign trade the more industry is dependent on artificial stimulus of the home market.

The second factor, equally obvious, is the "industrial peace" dictated by this form of government. Herr von Weinberg says the spirit of Germany is so transformed there is no possibility of labor trouble. Certainly, there is no possibility of labor agitation.

music lovers in Samuel Goldwyn's "We Live Again," adapted from Leo Tolstoy's "Resurrection," are the Russian A Capella Choir which supplies a musical background for the beautiful and impressive Russian Easter Midnight Service; and the colorful gypsy chorus led by Nina Kochetz, famous opera star, and Khmara, the world's foremost interpreter and exponent of gypsy songs and music.

Anna Sten and Fredric March are the only professional actors who participate in the Easter Service, which is chanted entirely without instrumental accompaniment by voices to whom the ritual is an inborn tradition. Led by a picked group of sixteen men and twelve women, the celebrants, all gathered from the Russian colonies which dot the Pacific Coast, joined in creating a high point of religious song with their rendition of the Easter anthem, "Christos Voscrasia," or "Chrst Is Risen."

The gypsy choral ensemble referred to provides the entertainment at an officers' dnner, presided over by March in the role of the reckless young Prince Dmitri.

Pilot And Shogun

vantage, but find another galley at his command for the trip back through the Inland Sea. But he had not yet reached Beppu Bay. It was on his overland horse-back journey from Hirado to Oita that the internal attack touched off by Melchor's parting shot grappled with him and had its own way.

He half forgot it, however, in the unexpected welcome he began to receive when still half-a-day's journey from Oita. A big guard of honour came out to meet him from the village, and from that moment onward he had a triumphal procession. Far and wide he had become famous as the Shogun's friend, but this was his first visible proof of it. When he rode into Oita itself he was hailed as his favourite son. Its streets were gay with streamers painted with ideograms of greeting and good will, while all its populace bowed low as Anjin Sama rode through. The daimyo himself met him in the marketplace and ceremoniously conducted him to special lodgings. Here he was filled with good cheer for the day and night he remained, and on his departure they weighted him with gifts. To cap all, his precious books and instruments had been restored to him—Iyeyasu's surprise. The secret police of the shogunate had done its work well, as always, and as he sat in Iyeyasu's galley two stout bags bulging with his treasures lay at his feet.

As the galley drew out round the tip of the little cape his eyes grew moist with the farewells that followed from the shore; the racing and shouting crowds treating him no longer as merely an interesting stranger, but as one of themselves, and a samurai! Had his head not been set on so solidly it would surely have turned by the difference between his lot today and on that April day five years before. Then he was a shipwrecked waif with naught to his name but the rags on his back and the seaman's belt at his waist. Now he had become lord over three households, with more than a hundred vassals. Then he had been a skeleton beneath his scarecrow rags, now his too well-fed body was clad in silk. Then he was a prisoner in peril of his life on charges of piracy and robbery, charges supported by traitors from among his own crew. Now the great lord who had adjudged him guiltless had lifted him to be as Joseph was to Phaaroh.

Thus musing, he reached down and opened one of the bags so as to take stock of its treasure and gloat over it here in this peaceful galley, where he had nothing to do. On the very top lay Sir Humphey Gilbert's treatise on the Northern Passage, together with other dog-eared and thumb-marked volumes dealing with jeometry and mathematickes and navigacion, in which "the ould Emperour" took such delight. Beneath them, wrapped carefully in oiled silk, he could feel the precious contours of his compass, and a globe. His charts and other books and instruments would be in the other bag. And here at the very bottom of this one lay the small cedar casket that had been Master Nicholas Diggins's parting gift, but which Will had never opened, thinking it to be just a casket. Now in his idleness he lifted it out and broke the seal. To his surprise it was filled with pills, perhaps a thousand of them; dark green and covered with a protective film on which Master Diggins, who dabbled in pharmacy, had prided himself, as Will now recalled. On top of them lay a strip of vellum painstakingly inscribed in Master Diggins's cramped hand—

"When choler riseth or sperrits sink, take one."

At this moment Will was not choleric, but he did feel his spirits sinking as his conscience warmed to his interrupted attack; so being of an experimental turn, he swallowed a pill. So magical were its effects that ever after when he felt his temper rising or his spirits sinking he remembered Master Diggins, and took one. The subtle but manifest connection between his conscience and his digestive organs puzzled him, but results were what counted, so that the small cedar casket became more and more precious to him. Once in a long while there came thoughts that threatened to thick his blood, but ordinarilly he could snuff out the painful flame of his conscience with a charm in the shape of a bolus.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Power of Algebra

The "Power" of an equation is indicated by its "exponent," meaning a number symbol which shows how many equal factors entered into the power. When the concept of the exponent was broadened in algebra, new exponential types were introduced, to which definite meanings had to be assigned. It was thus determined that any quantity, large or small, whose exponent was O-was to be regarded as equal to 1.

The Most Luckless Fisherman

O. H. Bell of Chilicothe, Texas, is undoubtedly one of the unluckiest fishermen ever to dangle a lure into the waters of stream, pool or lake, because in six years of patient effort he has never even felt the quiver of a fish on his line. Bell buys the best tackle, baits and flies obtainable. He fishes in abundant waters alongside other successful anglers. Yet his luck never changes. He says he will continue his efforts for another six years before he finally gives up.

Free Meals and Lodging

Gunnison, Colorado, is proud of its sunny climate in both winter and summer, and the owners of the La Veta Hotel are so sure that residents can bask in sunshine every day that they will furnish anyone free meals and free lodging any day the sun doesn't appear. For 22 years they have kept an accurate record, showing that Gunnison maintained a perfect record for 9 of those years, and had only 16 days of cloudy weather compared with 8020 days of sunshine. And the Hotel made good its promise on those 16 cloudy days.

Social and Personal Notes

The climax of the play, "Father Returns" which high school students of the American school gave Friday evening, is pictured here. Left to right the players are the father, Laurence Durgin who is to be driven out of the home to which he has returned after a long absence, Katrina Kaelin (kneeling at his feet), his wife; Willam Fisher, the younger son who wants to give the father a home; Margaret Walser as the daughter who also has forgiven the father; and Junior Lake, the oldest son, who alone will not receive the father.

"They spoke Japanese just like Japanese," claimed Mr. Kujomi Hashimoto, beaming proudly, when the students of the American School in Japan concluded their interesting program in Japanese Friday evening at the school's auditorium.

Mr. Hashimoto had the particular right to beam for he is the high school teacher of Japanese at the school and it was his students who gave the highlight of the program, the one act play, "Father Returns," by the popular playwright, Mr. Kwan Kikuchi. The entire program will be repeated this evening at the American school.

But it wasn't only Mr. Hashimoto or parents in the audience who were surprised beyond fondest expectations at the fluency and the perfection of Japanese language and manners which the American students, from the primary grades through the high school, displayed. The attention with which the program held the Japanese men and women who leaned forward in their seats or stood so that they could catch every word and action, their smiles and their exclamations after the entertainment, attested to their delight and satisfaction.

Mr. Hashimoto explained that it wasn't "hard to see why the students did so well." He said that in addition to taking Japanese in the grades, the American students play with Japanese boys and girls and thus during their free hours, learn even more than they acquire in the schoolroom. Then, too, the high school students on the program are studying Japanese as an elective subject, just as those in America might study Latin or French. "But of course, living in the country, they naturally learn more than any classroom can give them. It is true that two years of French in American high schools never give the students the command of the language two years of Japanese does here and that isn't because I am a better teacher," he said.

The program began with an opening address, quite long but very good, by Miss Elizabeeth Jorgenson who wore a kimono. Grade children demonstrated their ability when they gave the playlet, "Showers." Those participating were Dickie Neville, Richard Rolfe, Robert Bruce Brown, Mutsu Suzuki, Leonid Livshitz, Alexander Yusha, Bruce Robert Brown, Mary Munoz, and Omer Nebil.

An attractive scene was that in which Miss Elinore Strok wrote a poem to spring. Seated before a beautiful gold screen on a silk cushion before a low table and with a flower arrangement of plums at the elbow of her colorful kimono sleeve, she wrote a poem about plum blossoms in calligraphy and later when she read her poem aloud, her eyes ran up and down the page.

The story of the rabbit in the moon was told by grade children, singing in Japanese, with Miss E. Cunningham playing the piano accompaniment. Miss Jacqueline Gauntlett gave two graceful dances, interpreting spring and summer.

Junior Lake as the elder brother, Kenichiro Kuroda, who had to sacrific his own interests to keep the family together when deserted by the father, and William Fisher who took the role of his younger brother, had the leading roles in the one-act play, "Father Returns." Not only did they speak and act like Japanese but they also looked the parts they took. In fact, the make-up of all the characters was good, too. Margaret Walser as the daughter and Katrina Kaelin as the mother had less to say but succeeded in being excellent assistance to the leading players. Laurence Durgin played the part of the father who returns after a long absence to find that his eldest son will not forgive him. He turns to go away to the grief of the weeping wife and daughter and the discomfort of his younger son. After he goes, a pitiful, forlorn figure, the oldest son relents and himself goes after the father.

This play, in a Japanese room improvised on the school stage, was considered by the Japanese in the audience as excellently given.

Saito Foresees No War In East Or In Europe

Japan Society In N.Y. Told 'Peace Mentality' Has Arms Purveyor On Run

In the midst of a new war scare in Europe and extreme uneasiness in the Orient, Hiroshi Saito, Japanese Ambassador to the United States, assured the Japan Society of New York at its annual dinner on March 11 at the Waldorf-Astoria that he saw no serious danger of a conflagration either in Europe or in the Far East, says the New York Herald Tribune.

Mr. Saito voiced hope for peace between Japan and China, saying it would be to the interest not only of those two nations, but of the Western World as well. He professed to see "a welcome light in the Far Eastern sky."

The psychology of people and of nations toward war had changed, the Japanese envoy said, and the steadily growing "peace mentality" was making the purveyor of arms "a harassed man."

"Armaments, large as they are," he said, "are only for defensive purposes—at least from the point of view of the country that constructs and owns them."

Taft Assails "Yellow Press"

Henry W. Taft, president of the society, appealed for more accurate knowledge of Japan by Americans.

"There is a yellow press on both sides of the Pacific," said Mr. Taft, adding that it had talked much of war and made the most of every rumor with scant regard for its truth. He referred to Mr. Saito as a diplomat of the new school who had come to this country to speak candidly and not to cloak his views in "courteous nothings and rhetorical obscurity."

Mr. Saito said:

"There are evidences that, although alongside of increasing armaments, there is a steadily growing peace mentality in mankind in general. There seems to be a race between peace and war. As to the outcome of race, I have no doubts. I am not at all alarmed by the frequent reports of danger. I can see none that is serious on any frontier, either across the Atlantic or across the Pacific, and certanly there is none on the North American continent. I can see in the policy of no great nation a desire or intention of making a great war. I believe, as I hope, that we have before us an era of peace among the great powers of the world. As all right-thinking men must hope, 'the war to end war' may have accomplished its purpose—at least as far as world wars are concerned."

Fears Bloodshed Is Not Over

Mr. Saito did not mean, he said, that all world problems are settled. He even foresaw some bloodshed in their settling, but he foresaw nothing on the scale of general warfare among many nations.

Concerning Sino-Japanese relations, the Ambassador said:

"Japan and China ought to be good friends. It is not only a natural duty of neighbors; it is in their best interests, and it is in the interests of the whole world. There would be no loss of trade or investment chances to the United States if the statesmen of these two nations of the East should be successful in their attempt to reach a good understanding. That is a bogey used to alarm gullible Americans. It is used by those who profit by discord of reports of it. It alarms only those who do not know the facts. If the Japanese can in any way assist the Chinese to stabilize conditions in their country the achievement will not only benefit the Chinese people—who have suffered long enough—but it will also facilitate and encourage American and European commercial and financial activities in China. Nothing is farther from the truth than the reports that Japan harbors aggressive designs against China which she wishes to promote by the impending negotiations."

Japan was a menace to no nation, the Ambassador said, but sought its own security and the welfare of its people.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Where Time Stands Still

Our system of measuring time is based upon the motion of the earth upon tis own axis. The inhabitants of the earth do not realize this motion, it appearing instead that the sun moves around the earth.

When the sun crosses the meridian we call it noon and begin the day 12 hours afterwards. Noon continually travels around the earth at the rate of one hour for every 15 degrees of longitude. Each hour's difference constitutes a different time zone. At the South Pole where all meridians merge into one, all the various systems of measuring time become one. As a result all clocks, whether slow or fast or even when they stand still, show the correct time at the South Pole. But the passage of time remains unaffected. The earth still requires 24 hours to revolve on it axis, and 365 tmes 24 hours are required before the earth will accomplish its annual evolution around the sun. Admiral Byrd when exactly at the South Pole can hear any program that is on the air at the same time, regardless of time zones, but he cannot anticipate the future or any program that lies even a minute ahead.

the casket containing the ashes of the Taiko. After this the gardens were visited, the most elegant of all he had seen.

It interested him to learn from the high priest that there were thirty-five sects of Buddhism, and that no partiality was shown to the one Iyeyasu favoured.

"Once when the bonzes of all these schools concurred in a request to him to banish the padres and friars he inquired, just as if he did not know, how many varieties of religion they themselves represented. When they said, 'Thirty-five,' he remarked, 'Well, where thirty-five sects can be tolerated, we can easily put up with one more, so leave the strangers in peace.'"

On the fourth day Iyeyasu's men had completed the outfitting of the Mary as if for a very long voyage. Will having meanwhile found no time to paint on the name. In saying farewell he expressed his amazement at the splendour of Kyoto.

"Yes," smiled His Majesty, "but remember, this Western Capital has a six-hundred-year start over Yedo. Our Eastern Capital is still new and garish, but time will mellow it, and I promise you its architecture shall one day be as fine as anything you see here."

Meanwhile, back at Hemi, the deserted wife marvelled no little at receiving no word. As weeks grew into months her wonder increased. She tried to set everything down to her husband's foreignness, but this seemed so unlike him. He wrote Japanese fairly well, and had never before left her so long without letters. Father Jerome had given her as a wedding present a painting of the Madonna and Bambino in a golden frame, and this she had set up on the "god shelf" with which every Japanese house is provided. Before it she always kept a light burning. Mother and Child came to mean more and more to her as she knelt and prayed night and morning that her lord and master might come back, or at the least send some word. If he but knew!

so into the house.

"Just a bite in my own house before I push on to His Majesty's," he says, and his wife, with that deft gift of ministry which he so admires in her places before him his favourite dishes. He cannot take his eyes off his children—two more links, he thinks swiftly, binding him to his strange second home.

"Have you named them?"

"No, no! Their father must do that!"

Will pondered deeply as he ate, and then set down his rice bowl with a clatter.

"The boy shall be Joseph, to remember his father, honoured as the friend of Pharaoh in a strange land. The girl shall be Susanna, to remember her mother, with a gift of ministry like that woman in the Gospel!"

His wife, trained as a Catholic, was transported; and as he galloped off he left her beaming, standing at the gate-way with a child on either arm. When she went in she knelt before the "god shelf" and thanked the Holy Mother. She thought her husband had come back to her as well as to their children.

Will soon overtook the Admiral's little retinue, and after shouting to him the wonderful news galloped on ahead. Seldom had the sheer zest of life so possessed him. Next day about the middle of the morning he reached Suruga, and had the whole afternoon and evening at His Majesty's court before Mukai Shogen arrived. Iyeyasu evinced the keenest interest in every detail of their experiences, but nothing pleased him quite so much as the bear hunt. He made each man tell the story over in his own way, and plied them with questions. Then, with an abrupt change of subject, he said:

"Anjin, what you report about the Passage seems important, and some day I shall hope to see you try it out. But now that you have two children in your house at Hemi, they seem to me to have as much claim on you as your family in England, to say the least. So I trust you will not object to serving me some years longer. I want you to build me at least one more ship."

To Will's own surprise he did not resist the argument. Somehow the children had thrown a spell. He only bowed, and sought further knowledge.

"You might take the twins with you if you like, and their mother; for it is far away from Hemi that I would have you build—far up above Yedo, near Sendai. A lord dwells there, one Daté, to whom I owe much. Besides, one of my sons is married to his daughter. He is one of the greatest daimyo in the empire, and helped me enormously at Seki-ga-hara by engaging my enemies in the North and thus keeping them out of that battle. Well, he wishes at some later date to send an embassy to Europe, for which purpose he desires you to build him a ship. You will go?"

"Your Majesty again honours me." said the pilot after a brief pause. "The twins make a mighty difference, I confess. And am I not plighted to your service?"

"Spoken like a courtier," murmured Iyeyasu, much pleased. "Then as soon as you can, make ready, and go up by one of my galleys. Mukai Shogen shall come to aid you as he can."

It was settled, therefore, before Will went back to Hemi, that he should spend but a short time there, and then enter the service of Lord Daté, about whom Iyeyasu told him a quaint tale:

"He has but one eye, Anjin, but well he knows how to use it! My predecessor the Taiko had some strange whims. One of them was to keep a big ill-tempered monkey in an ante-room. This beast would spring out at guests as they entered in their fine ceremonial robes, while the Taiko, in hiding, watched to see how they behaved under shock. Daté learned of this peculiarity before he himself was summoned to the presence, so when Hideyoshi went off on one of his long campaigns he bribed the servants to lend him the monkey. He so accustomed the beast to his presence and so glared at it with his one fearsome eye, while betaing it with a cane, that it came to know him and also to fear him. Before its master's return he sent it back, and then awaited his summons. You can guess what happened. Hideyoshi at his peep-hole was astounded. For Daté showed no surprise whatsoever when the monkey jumped out at him, but only glared, and it slunk away. Ever after, the Taiko swore that Daté was the coolest man in the empire. That is the kind of man you will serve. Please him, and he cannot do enough for you. But beware of him should his liking turn to hate!"

TOKYO WOMEN'S CLUB

"Although music is an international art, the characteristic of the various countries in which it is developed is stamped upon it to give it individuality, Mrs. Julliot de la Morandiere declared in a paper read before the Tokyo Women's club meeting at the Belgian Embassy Monday afternoon.

"In the absence of Mrs. de la Morandiere who was confined to her home by illness, the paper was read by Mrs. Antonin Raymond.

"Following the talk on French music, a program was given by a group of artists, all of whom had studied in France. The program was arranged by Mrs. Netke-Loewe, chairman of the music committee of the club.

"Characteristics of French music, Mrs. de la Morandiere said in her paper, are its concrete, intellectual, and sober qualities. It does not aspire to abstract subjects but is suggested by the concrete observations drawn from nature. It touches on human sentiments in a manner common to the experiences of many.

"Because of its intellectual quality, French music may seem sober, especially in comparison to the music of Italy but it is always clear, well ordered and full of grace, the paper continued. French music avoids exaggeration.

"'Modern music,' Mrs. de la Morandiere wrote, 'began in France about the 17th century and the foremost musician was Lully who was born in Italy but who came to France at the age of 13. Lully was appointed by Louis XIV chief of court music and director of the French opera.

"'Rameau and Couperin, the former the creater of the tragedie lyrique and the latter a master of chamber music, were the contributing musicians of the 18th century. A light music also sprang up at this time, developing into the bergerettes which recall Marie Antoinette and her court playing in the hamlet of Trianon.

"'Berlioz was the greatest French musician of the 19th century. Chopin, although born in Poland, spent the greater part of his life in France where he loved, suffered and died,' Mrs. de la Morandiere said.

"She recalled that the latter part of the 19th century saw the French musicians divided into the group who composed for the theater and those who composed for voice and instruments. 'The most original of the 19th century musicians was Debussy whom she termed the true creater of modern French music. It is his music which carries out the three vital characteristics of French music, its concrete, intellectual and sober qualities.

"The musical program opened with solos by Mr. Yoji Otaguro, the Japanese tenor who was accompanied by Mr. Paul Rosenstand. Miss Yoshiko Sato who took the part of the Cookie Witch in the song-play, "Hansel and Gretel," which was given for the Tokyo Women's club last Christmas, sang several French selections. Miss Chieko Hara played three piano solos and the program was concluded by a duet given by Mr. Otaguro and Miss Sato.

"Baroness de Bassompierre who welcomed the guests and whose kindness made the meeting at the Embassy possible, had arranged for tea and refreshments in the Embassy dining room. Mrs. Iweins d'Eeckhoutte, wife of the Belgian Charge d'Affaires, presided as hostess at the tea and among the guests were Mrs. Fernand Pila and Mrs. Montt.

"Mrs. J. D. Hitch Jr. announced that the next meeting will be held on May 6, when a canal boat trip will be taken under the auspices of the Civics committee.

New 'Oldest City' Is Bared In Orient

Further Excavations At Tepe Gawra Reveal Site Of 6,000 Years Ago

Another prehistoric city antedating the settlement 5,700 years old found in February at Tepe Gawra, in Northern Mesopotamia, has been uncovered on the same site by a joint archaeological expedition from the museum of the University of Pennsylvania and the American Schools of Oriental Research.

The most recently discovered successor to the title of "the world's oldest city," a title which archaeologists believe will change hands frequently before the huge mound at Tepe Gawra is excavated completely, is about 6,000 years old and belongs to the period of the "painted pottery peoples," says a recent article in the New York Times.

Because of its association with that period, the discovery of the city marks the attainment of one of the expedition's chief objectives, according to a report received recently from Charles Bache, field director, who pointed out that it was solely in the hope of making a systematic study of the "painted pottery peoples" that work was begun at Tepe Gawra in 1927 by Dr. E. A. Speiser, now director of the American School in Baghdad.

So-called because of the striking geometric designs painted upon their earthenware vessels, "the painted pottery peoples" are known to have swept like a conquering horde from the East over India, Persia and Mesopotamia in the sixth millenium before Christ.

Small quantities of their distinguishing pottery have been found at various times in Baluchistan, Persia, Northern Mesopotamia and Babylonia, but no associated remains were uncovered and nothing could be learned regarding the racial type, language, religion, customs, or even the household crafts of these peoples.

Painted Pottery Found

"At Tepe Gawra every level, from the twelfth, which we have just excavated in part, down to level 20, which has been revealed to us only through a trial trench shows this painted pottery to be a predominating feature," Mr. Bache's report said, in part.

"By systematically exploring level 12, and subsequently the eight earlier levels in the mound," he continued, "there is every reason to believe we will learn much of the story of the architecture, the arts and crafts, and—if we are fortunate—something of the religious worship of the 'painted pottery peoples.'

"Already our partial excavation of the city on level 12 has revealed that their architecture surpassed that of three later periods represented on the site. One large building was so extensive that it may have been the palace of a nobleman. The largest of its many rooms, which measures about 37 by 17 feet, has mud brick walls coated with fine white plaster to conceal their humble material.

"This is the earliest use of wall plaster recorded thus far, and shows that the inhabitants of this 6,000-year-old city already had mastered the secret of burning lime for mortar and stucco.

"Moreover, the walls of this plastered room were oriented carefully to the cardinal points of the compass, thus indicating that the architect was able to command the services of an able astronomer, or what is more likely, that he himself was the most learned man in the community with some knowledge of the stars. From the amazing advances made later by the Babylonian scientists we need not be surprised at this.

Cooking Pot Held Bones

"Judging from the number of pottery and stone vessels found in it this building was not a temple but was used as a dwelling by many persons. In one room was a small oven containing a cooking pot from which the lid had not been removed. Investigating, we found that the pot still contained meat bones, a fact which may justify the assumption that in this particular dwelling dinner was being prepared when the sudden approach of the unknown enemy who conquered the city caused the residents to flee precipitately.

"In spite of the architecture, there is every evidence that we are dealing on Level 12 with an older city than modern science has known. Metals have been left far behind. For instance, gold was found on Level 9, but we know that its possessors were not acquainted with the processes of smelting and refining metals, but obtained them from other metal-working tribes."

Infants' Bodies in Jars.

"The study of the religions of these early races invariably begins with consideration of their burial customs. At Tepe Gawra, in 400 B. C., respect for the departed had not progressed to the point where the surviving relatives built large underground burial chambers, such as those found on level 9, but several large jars, painted in monochrome like other typical specimens of level 12, have been found to contain the bones of infants. The bodies were not cremated but merely placed in the jars and interred. The method of burial for adults remains to be learned.

"None of the flat seals common to later strata at other Mesopotamian sites have been found in level 12," Dr. Bache stated, "but we have uncovered two impressions from such seals which were made on wet clay and then baked into a record too substantial for time to destroy. They are disappointing, however, when compared with seal impressions found on level 11, for among the latter was one of unusual interest. Possibly it depicts the world's earliest brewery in that it reveals two men who are stirring the contents of a vat with long poles."

MINISTER ENTERTAINED

The Czechoslovak Minister, Dr. Havlicek, entertained at a farewell dinner Monday evening for the Spanish Minister and Mrs. Mendez de Vigo. The guests present were Mrs. Joseph C. Grew, the Soviet Ambassador and Mrs. Yurenev, the Netherlands Minister, General Pabst, the Rumanian Charge d'Affaires and Mrs. Stoicesco, the Danish Charge d'Affaires and Mrs. Hergel, the Belgian Charge d'Affaires and Mrs. Iweins d'Eeckhoutte, the Spanish Counsellor, Mr. Gomez de Molina; Mr. Okubo of the Imperial Household Department, Mrs. Takashima, Dr. Brooks Emeny, Mr. and Mrs. Dell'Oro of Yokohama and the Czechoslovak Secretary, Mr. Krupka.

Robinson Assails Huey Long's Plan

Senate Majority Leader Calls It Utopian, Visionary And 'Basically Communistic'

Senator Huey Long's "share the wealth plan" and the Townsend old-age pension project were denounced as utopian and visionary by Senator Joseph T. Robinson, majority leader in the Senate, in an address on March 21 at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City.

Senator Robinson spoke at the dinner of the Drug, Chemical and Allied Trades Section of the New York Board of Trade. He warned against schemes requiring fantastic expenditures and assailed advocates of inflation, according to the New York Times.

"Except in times of emergency, when, as during the present period, extraordinary and unusual measures are required, every governmental expenditure should be covered by revenues. There is no inexhaustible source from which funds may be procured," Senator Robinson said. "More appropriations mean more taxes.

"Who among my hearers can recall a nation-wide money panic or business depression that did not elicit numerous plans for monetary inflation—suggestions that the only adequate remedy is the issuance of large amounts of additional currency? Such inflation has seldom, if ever, proved advantageous. Almost in every instance it has been harmful and in many cases disastrous. Nevertheless, it is the remedy universally prescribed by quacks for all economic ills."

Long Plan Assailed

While characterizing the Townsend plan as impracticable and bound to lead to an unbearable tax burden and destructive inflation, Senator Robinson denounced the Long plan as communistic, impossible of execution without wrecking the entire economic structure of the nation and carrying within itself, if attempted, not the establishment of social justice but of a universal "equality of misery."

Assailing Senator Long for his preparations to run for the Presidency of the United States on an independent ticket with his "share-the-wealth plan" as his platform, Senator Robinson declared that Senator Long was trying to send the people "on a chase after a bag of gold at the rainbow's end," and predicted that "in the end they will realize his duplicity and recognize the deceit that has been practiced upon them when the fragments of their shattered hopes have been enveloped in despair."

"The share the wealth plan has been approved by many to whose attention, its vagueness and impracticability have not been called," Senator Robinson said. "One renders no service by misleading credulous people to believe things that are fanciful, far fetched and untrue."

Senator Robinson's address was a detailed analysis of both the Long and Townsend plans, in which he sought to show their economic impracticability and social destructiveness. The inevitable consequence of the Long plan, Senator Robinson said, would be a repetition in this country of conditions now prevailing in Russia.

Would "Break Up Industry"

"There they share the wealth, but the trouble is that those who produce the wealth are living in a state that no citizen of this country would long endure," Senator Robinson declared.

The first result of the Long plan, he said, "would be the breaking up of the major industries and their management, the destruction of going concerns, the discontinuance of operations, and increase in unemployment beyond the power of any one to anticipate or overcome."

Having confiscated all the wealth of the country, Senator Robinson said, Senator Long would find that the confiscation will have also wrecked completely the economic and industrial structure of the nation and rendered the people incapable of supporting themselves through work and the acquisition of property.

Senator Robinson challenged Senator Long to formulate his proposal in legislative form.

"Senator Long has not reduced his proposition to legislative form," he said. "He prefers to keep it in embryo, probably because the difficulties which inhere in efforts to reduce the plan to a legislative draft are so great as to appear insurmountable."

Called Fundamentally Communistic

The Long plan is fundamentally communistic, Senator Robinson emphasized, saying that "it has the approval of many who would not recognize and regard themselves as Communists."

"Nevertheless, it is closely akin to sovietism, in that it proposes that the government shall confiscate a large part of the private wealth in the United States," he said. "It differs from sovietism in the particular that the property is not to be permanently owned by the national government as in Russia, but is to be given away in the form of homes, automobiles, radios and incomes, to those who have not sufficient resources to acquire these comforts for themselves.'"

Subjecting the Townsend old age pension plan to an equally detailed analysis, Senator Robinson proceeded to show that not only was its cost prohibitive but that it is "manifestly unfair" to those who would be expected to continue to work to finance it by the proceeds of their toil.

He termed the Townsend measure "a wild scheme" that would cost upwards of $19,200,000,000 a year to finance. Like the Long plan, it is inconsistent "with reason, experience or sound argument" and both "are violative of fundamental and generally accepted laws," Senator Robinson maintained.

"Yet because of the distress in which so many of our people find themselves they are looked upon with favor by many for the magic which they promise the improvident and the unfortunate."

Discussing the method by which it is proposed to finance the Townsend plan, Senator Robinson pointed out that "to provide pensions for less than 7 per cent of our population, those who work and produce must bear a burden of taxation which beyond doubt would prove unbearable and crushing to a people already heavily loaded with Federal, State, municipal and district taxes."

Referring to the 2 per cent tax on business transactions contmeplated to defray the cost of the Townsend plan, Senator Robinson said:

"Tax authorities and other economists agree that a 2 per cent tax on the money value of all business, commercial and financial transactions would paralyze all business, or reduce it to such mean proportions that the revenue derived would diminish to the vanishing point."

Administration and enforcement of the plan would bring "deceit, fear, turmoil, hatred and jealousy" over the land, the Senator warned.

"Certainly," Senator Robinson concluded, "if the gilt which covers the framework of this gateway to a paradise of fools should be removed the decaying timbers would be exposed."

he could fire and reload, and presently had the satisfaction of bringing Pessoa himself to his knees. At this instant a well directed fireball from the second storey of the tower landed in a powder bucket just over an open hatch, and the whole stern burst into flame. Pessoa, seeing everything lost, now won Will's admiration by dying like a brave soldier. Holding his crucifix aloft he cried out:

"God be praised, since this is His will! Comrades, save yourselves who can!"

Then he dragged his broken leg to the off side of his doomed ship and gave a final order to fire her powder magazine, after which he dropped into the sea. The most of his scant crew followed him. Arima, realizing the danger just in time, commanded his rowers to back away into safety. The explosion tore a great hole in the ship's side below her water-line, and she heeled over and sank. To his regret Arima could not restrain some of his men from firing on the floundering Portuguese, all of whom were either shot to death or drowned. All through the night they searched in small boats for Pessoa's body, but it was never found. Strange to say, three chests of silver were reclaimed, despite their weight.

So recently as 1928 the hulk of the Mother of God, after lying 318 years at a depth of thirty-five fathoms, yielded up to Japanese divers a cannon seven feet long, two iron helmets, an anchor, and a timber of teak-wood—mementoes of Arima's revenge.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

Arm To Back Pact, Baldwin Advises

Britain Must Be Prepared To Enforce Any Security Agreement, He Warns

"The simple question is whether we are going to have an inadequate army and navy or forces properly equipped to defend this country against attack or to take part in carrying out our obligations to others in some agreement for collective security," Stanley Baldwin told a mass meeting of the Junior Imperial League at Albert Hall, London, on March 23, according to the London correspondent of the New York Times, whose article follows:

"It is our difficult privilege to be the torch-bearer of ordered freedom in Europe," declared the Lord President of the Council and virtual head of the present government.

He tactfully refrained from mention of Anthony Eden's conversations in Paris today or Sir John Simon's departure tomorrow for Berlin. He made a point of saying he did not blame any particular country for the failure of disarmament. The tone of his speech was evidently calculated not to put any new difficulties in the way of the Anglo-German negotiations.

"Peace," Mr. Baldwin warned, "cannot be achieved without patience, perseverance and struggle. Possibly it can come only through blood and tears."

Defends Increased War Budget

He said no country had worked or was working so hard for peace as Great Britain and that the British Empire was the greatest single force in the world today for peace. He then defended recent increases totaling £10,000,000 in British armament expenditures by reiterating that they were necessary to make up deficiencies that had accumulated in the military services during the period that Britain had been giving her futile example to the world of unilateral arms reduction.

"Disarmament the way we dreamed of it," he continued, "is not going to be effective in the near future, but I do not blame any particular country, and least of all the League of Nations, for that. The League needs its friends today, and I hope they will all stick by it as the British Government has and will continue to do with more loyalty than ever.

"Many League advocates in this country have expected too much of the League, and now there is a reaction because of its weakened state, due to the withdrawal of Japan and Germany."

Mr. Baldwin said he wished for many reasons that flying had never been invented. "But it is here," he continued, "and somehow we have got to Christianize it.

"It would be easy to abolish all military aircraft, but we would have left commercial planes, from which it would be very easy to drop bombs. Unfortunately, I doubt very much if any country would consent to eliminate its fighting air force until it was made clear what would happen if any other country abused its use of civil aircraft.

"Concerning our own country, few will doubt the wisdom of the government's decision that the British air force must not be inferior to that of any country within striking distance of our shores."

Says Arms Pact Must Have Teeth

Referring to disarmament generally, Mr. Baldwin said:

"Failure for the present in this respect brings us to the question of determining limitation at some point to be agreed upon. I have felt for some time that that was the thing to work for. But there must be the strictest regulations for inspection, and all nations would have to agree what to do in case any signatory of a limitation agreement violated it or refused to reduce illegal arms after being detected."

The government was not surprised, but was fully satisfied with the results of Mr. Eden's conversations in Paris today with Pierre Laval, the French Foreign Minister, and Fulvio Suvich, the Italian Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

A communique to the effect that all three powers were in full accord and that all understood the British Foreign Secretary's visit to Berlin was to be purely exploratory in purpose was issued pursuant to an advance arrangement for the sake of mollifying mistaken French public opinion that there had been a rift between the London and Paris Foreign Offices.

The matter was further clinched, according to the British view, by the unanimity of the Paris declaration that the scope of Sir John Simon's Berlin conversations was determined by the Anglo-French agreement of Feb. 3.

Ethiopia Defiant, Declares Explorer

Englishwoman Says Conquest Of African Empire Would Be Long, Costly Task

Ethiopia's startling contrasts between the modern and the primitive and the confident readiness of her warriors to defend her against any foreign power are here described by a young English explorer. She is the first white woman ever to make the journey from Addis Ababa to Nairobi.

The Ethiopians are well aware of Italian activities at their frontier, but they are well prepared to defend their country, is the opinion expressed by Violet Crissy Marcks in a dispatch to the New York Times from Naibori, Kenya Colony, Africa, on March 22.

They seemed a bit optimistic on this point; but, after traveling through the country and seeing the conditions under which a war would be fought, I realized that any foreign power that tried to take Ethiopia would find it a long and costly business.

Motor cars had never before made the journey from Addis Ababa to Nairobi. After entertaining my party lavishly, however, Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia unhesitatingly gave me permission to travel across his country to the frontier of Kenya Colony.

Emperor Provided Guard

The Emperor also provided armed guards, who sat on top of the motor trucks as we started our trek. After a two-day journey we arrived at Urgaalem, capital Sudamo Province, where I was entertained by Ras Dasta Dumpta, Governor of Sudamo and Boran Provinces. He is a son-in-law of the Emperor.

I continued my journey due south and east of a chain of lakes. We went down and up mountain sides, and the scenery was magnificent. Every night we camped amid exquisite beauty. At night I heard various wild animals and during the day I saw gazelles, kudoo, dickik, ibex, bushback, baboons, ostriches, guinea fowl, pea-hens, grouse and hundreds of different birds of many hues.

The important places we went through had guards of honor varying from 50 to 3,000 soldiers. When we reached Moayle, at the border of Kenya Colony and Ethiopia, the country suddenly changed. We left the mountains behind and entered flat desert wastes. After four more days of hazardous motoring we arrived at Nairobi.

The most mileage we covered in one day was 170 miles and the least twenty-three, depending upon the condition of the trails we had to follow.

Ethiopian Courtesy

So many stories have been told about how unpopular the foreigner is in Ethiopia that I would like to say that nothing but courtesy was shown me on my visit and I hope my experience will help to enlighten people about what is still a little-known country.

The usual way of entering Ethiopia is by the only railway, from the French port of Djibouti. Guards stand at attention as the train enters stations. After a run of nearly 500 miles the train reaches Addis Ababa, which is 8,500 feet above the sea level, surrounded by hills and has a perfect climate.

Visiting the Imperial Palace at night, I could hear lions roaring from the outer darkness. I talked with Emperor Haile Selassie and the Empress and also with the Crown Prince, the Duke of Harrar and the youngest royal child, 4 years old.

The Emperor is by far the cleverest man in the whole country. He has read widely of European and Asiatic events and has studied the forms of government in other countries. He works hard from early morning to late at night. He showed me an excellent herd of Syrian cattle and explained what he hoped to grow in his new orchard and gardens.

Slaves Refuse to Quit

The Emperor's agreement to abolish slavery in fifteen years is obviously wise. I visited several houses where the owners had freed their slaves. The slaves in most instances refused to go away but were fed just the same by the owners and paid for any work they did.

Saturday is market day in Addis Ababa. The streets are filled with human being mixed up with motor cars, taxis, camels, mules, horses, sheep and goats. The men wear trousers tight at the ankles and shirts tight at the wrists. The women wear looso gowns, and all they have over their shoulders is the chamma, a long, fine piece of cotton. Their garments are white. Over their heads they hold a small dome-shaped sunshade on a long handle.

Both sexes in the upper classes wear cloaks and cowboy hats, which they always raise on greeting any one. They never walk, but ride on mules, with servants following them.

I visited schools and hospitals. Education is free. There are many missionaries in the country. The Ethiopians are Coptic Christians, with church ceremonies dating back to the time of Solomon. There is an Archbishop elected from Alexandria, who selects the Bishops of Ethiopia.

Every one must be in his house by 10 o'clock at night or have a special permit to stay out. There is no income tax, but a head tax of a dollar for each person over 15 years old. Imports are taxed heavily.

I also paid a visit to the Foreign Minister, Belatian Gheta Herouys, who has written sixteen books printed in Amharic. This is the national language, although many dialects are spoken in different parts of the country. The Foreign Minister escorted me to the old Imperial Chapel, where thousands of persons were chanting. It was a ceremony honoring the Virgin Mary.

From the Holy of Holies, the Ark of the Covenant was brought out and taken three times around the outside of the chapel. The Emperor, carrying a rifle, followed it as its chief guardian. After him came noblemen and many others, and then priests in gorgeous colors danced in front of the Ark of the Covenant. Harps with ten strings, such as David used, were being played. I was the only European present.

In the evening a dinner party was given in my honor at the Palace, where everything mirrored modern civilization. The French cuisine, champagne and wine were as good as the best procurable in Europe, and the dinner-table appointments were in excellent taste.

Heaven Forfend!

Gene—"Has the depression hit you yet?"

Bill—"I'll say it has! First, I lost my job and went back to the Old Man's to live; sent my children to the orphans' home; my wife went back to her mother, and I shot my dog."

Gene—"That's bad."

Bill—"Yes, sir, if times get any worse, I'm afraid I'll have to give up my car."

French Hail Italy As Their New Ally

Deputies Ratify Rome Pact By 555 To 9; Cheer Friendly Gesture To Yugoslavia

With full consciousness that the old system of allied union against Germany has been at least temporarily discarded by the British decision to deal directly with Berlin, the French Chamber on March 22 sought consolidation in voting 555 to 9 for ratification of the Rome agreement of Jan. 7.

There was in the gesture something almost defiant, says P. J. Philip in a despatch from Paris to the New York Times. Seldom had such a majority been given to any French Foreign Minister for any act or policy.

The vote had little or nothing to do with the grants of African territory made to Italy three months previous. It was intended, as it did, emphatically to reflect France's complete approval of Premier Mussolini's attitude during the past week. It reflected approval of his protest against German rearmament, of his insistence on the next day at Paris three-power conversations and later at Como, and of his move through his Ambassador at Belgrade to put an end to the long friction between his country and France's ally, Yugoslavia.

The article dated March 22, continues:

New Line-up in Europe Seen

Those who sat through the session would not escape the feeling that they were witnessing the beginning of a new alignment of Europe. Fascist Italy hitherto has in the camp of the treaty revisionists, opposed to France. Today France welcomed her back to the fold of those whom Foreiign Minister Pierre Laval described as "people of goodwill, united in the service of peace."

Today's was a remarkable debate, not only because of the vote, but because of the things that were and were not said. Deputy Henry Franklin-Boullon began it, seizing on the improved relations between Italy and Yogoslavia and Italy's protest against Germany's rearmament as in sharp contrast with the outcome of the London conversations.

Even regarding the Rome agreement, however, he had criticisms to make. As, usual, he asserted France was making immediate material concessions for future promises. What Italy was to give in European politics in return for African concessions, he objected, was not precise enough.

He assailed Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin and Foreign Minister Laval for not insisting at London that, if the effort to reach a new deal with Germany failed, the British Government should promise to renew and even strengthen the entente with France. In sending its Foreign Secretary to Berlin, he asserted, the British Government had come under the accusation of desertion. Even worse, he charged, Sir John Simon had suggested that Germany join the conversations at Como. Was the old four-power pact to be renewed?

Warns Against Faith in Geneva

"Put not your faith in the sheepfold of Geneva," exhorted M. Franklin-Bouillon, began it, seizing sheep are on one side and the wolves on the other. Never has the world been so near destruction since it emerged from barbarism.

"Go to Geneva, if you want to; but go there to declare that, in the face of Germany's rearmament, France and her allies have established a military alliance that will prevent all the evil actions of that nation of prey."

Foreign Minister Laval, in a much more moderate speech, did his utmost to build up the importance of the three-power conversations for which Anthony Eden, British Lord Privy Seal, arrived here this evening from London, and to which Fulvio Suvitch, Italian Foreign Under-Secretary, will come tomorrow morning.

"By her gesture," said M. Laval, "Germany has certainly retarded the work of pacification. I hope it will not be for long. We do not wish to exclude any one from solid, durable peace."

He still put his faith in the pacts now being organized. His anxiety not to widen the breach with Great Britain was reflected in these words:

"I would ask the representatives of this nation to limit their reproaches to the French Government. Every people acts according to its habits and temperament. Tomorrow there will be new conversations, and I have faith in the international action that is developing."

Reference to M. Laval's forthcoming visit to Moscow evoked long applause. So, too, did his comment on Premier Mussolini's "spirit of decision and his action in seeking friendship with Yugoslavia."

To a Deputy who questioned the position of Ethiopia under the Rome agreements, M. Laval replied:

"There is nothing in the Rome accord that can affect the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Ethiopia, which are guaranteed not only by the treaty of 1906, but by the covenant of the League of Nations."

Hope Put in Talks

Tomorrow's meeting between M. Laval, Mr. Eden and Signor Suvich is being played up in the government press to the utmost to efface the disagreeable impression caused by the British decision to send Sir John Simon to Berlin, despite last Saturday's action by Germany. Far more importance, however, is being attached to the meeting at Como or Milan, to be held after Sir John's conversations at Berlin, and those of Mr. Eden at Warsaw, Moscow and possibly Prague.

Today's French press on the whole supports the protest made yesterday to Berlin and the French appeal to the League Council. A notable exception is Le Quotidien, which recently has been carrying on a strong campaign against both M. Flandin and M. Laval.

That paper argues that the appeal to the League is not intelligent. It points out that the Council consists just now of four permanent members—Britain, France, Italy and Russia—and seven non-permanent members — Czechoslovakia, Poland, Turkey, Mexico, Portugal, Venezuela and Sweden. Its analysis of the probable attitudes of these countries offers little hope or comfort.

"From that tribunal," le Quotidien concludes, "we will harvest only disappointment; and we shall go finally to Moscow to compromise our security by applying to that people of Europe whose state of peace is by far the most precarious."

Doctors Urge Using Acid For Executing Criminals

Discussion in the Finnish Parliament of a bill for the restoration of capital punishment has brought out a sharp disagreement among medical experts as to the most suitable method of execution.

The Chief Coroner suggests hanging. A medical board prefers prussic acid as the most merciful manner of death, according to the New York Times.

If the latter proposal is accepted, Finland will be the first country to adopt this method of carrying out death sentences. The electric chair seems to have no advocate here.

Two Finnish criminals recently sentenced to life imprisonment asked that they be put to death and their bodies be given to science.

Planes Find Glaciers In Yukon Territory

of the Yukon.

Hubbard Glacier

"Besides the discovery of the huge glacier system on the east and north slopes of Mt. Hubbard, we were amazed to find that the Hubbard Glacier, formerly believed to be less than 30 miles in length and thought to end at the divide between Mt. Hubbard and Mt. Vancouver, actually flows fully 40 miles farther into the very heart of the St. Elias Range. It grows broader rather than narrower, and finally ends 60 or 70 miles from Yakutat Bay at the very base of Mt. Logan.

"Mt. Vancouver appears to be utterly impregnable. It is one of the most amazing mountain masses that I have ever seen, rising to an altitude of nearly 16,000 feet from the flat snow fields of the Hubbard Glacier in one gigantic cliff of ice and rock without a single climbable angle.

"Between Mt. Hubbard and Mt. Lucania stretches a range of hitherto unseen mountains in which there are at least 20 peaks over 10,000 feet in height and several even higher than this. Mt. Lucania lies so far north of the region of our projected mapping and exploration that we did not visit it on this flight; but we plan to return with our mapping cameras next week and cover the whole area with as complete a network of oblique photographs as possible.

Aerial Photographs

"Before returning to Carcross we made several photographs of Mt. Hubbard and the glaciers east of it, on one of which our base is now established. These pictures were developed last night under rather adverse conditions and are being used now to formulate our future plans of exploration of this magnificent mountain country which is probably the last utterly unexplored region in North America.

"The weather now promises to be poor for a day or more and our men are engaged in preparing more loads for the airplane to carry to our base. As soon as conditions permit we will have a party of six men, 4,000 pounds of supplies, eight dogs and a dog driver to transport to the mountains, before our exploratory work there can begin. This should be accomplished in about a week unless we run into unusual weather conditions.

"With perfect weather, the job could be completed in two days. The town of Carcross has laid itself out to do everything in its power to make us comfortable and to facilitate our work, and the pilots of Northern Airways who are handling our flying are not only wonderful companions but superb flyers operating under the most adverse conditions. Our men are all in perfect condition and we look forward to being able to accomplish a job that will open up one of the last great exploratory secrets of this continent.

"After the base is permanently established on the glacier at an altitude of about 3,000 feet, where the first plane load of supplies has already been landed, we will advance camp as rapidly as possible to the divide at its head, 10,000 feet high and 40 miles away, from which the major part of our mapping and photographic work will be done during the months of April and May.

"Our pilot will return in mid-April to bring in mail and to be assured of our safety. A dog team will descend the glacier to meet him at that time. After the ice has broken up late in May we hope to push out to Bates Lake some 30 miles from the foot of our glacier, there to await the airplane which will bring us back to civilization as soon as flying on pontoons is possible once more."

Interport Games To Be Held At St. Joseph's College

Both the ladies' and men's Y.C.A.C. basketball teams are putting in a hard last week of practices for the interport games against Kobe which will be played in Yokohama this year on April 28.

St. Joseph's College has consented to permit the games to be played at the school gymnasium as the club's court is considered too small for these important matches.

The ladies' team will play a game Saturday afternoon on the Y.C.A.C. court. The game is scheduled for 2 p.m., and the following will represent the club: Misses Lucette Eymard, Charlotte Eymard, Rosemary Heseltine, Babs Heseltine, Doreen Edwards, Eva Down, Chips Moss and Irene Lord, (captain).

Arrangements for a men's game are also under way and if the plans materialize, this contest will get under way at 5 p.m. The following will represent the club: Down, Harriss, M. Fachtmann, (captain), G. Fachtmann, Schoene, Zuber and H. Salter.

Players of both teams are asked to note that there will be a practice on the St. Joseph's College court on Monday beginning at 7 p.m., and as this will probably be the only night on which the court will be available before the interport all are urged to be present.

Sees Labor Gains In Textiles Code

U.S. Bureau Reports Rise In Silk And Rayon Pay And Work Under Agreements

A discussion of benefits to workers under the NRA in the silk and rayon textile industries was given recently by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics in its report on wages, earnings and hours in these industries. The report is the second instalment of a task imposed by the terms of the settlement of the 1934 strike.

Seasonal fluctuations in the industry have decreased considerably since NRA was instituted, having become more moderate than in 1931 and 1932, the report said.

At the same time, however, the silk industry has fallen off and the rayon industry picked up in the past five years, the total output of the two industries remaining virtually constant, says the following article by the New York Times:

Employment in terms of total man-hours a week reached the highest point of the last three years in July, 1933, when 4,350,000 hours a week were worked. By January, 1934, the volume of employment had declined to 2,900 hours a week, about the level prevailing in March and April, 1933. In February and March, 1934, about 3,850,000 man-hours a week were worked, but during the Summer the industry was again operating in the neighborhood of 3,000,000 man-hours.

Weekly and hourly earnings fell sharply during the depression. From 1925 to 1929 workers averaged about $21 per week. In 1932 they averaged $13.50. It is believed that hourly earnings fell about 10 per cent from 1929 to 1931.

Monthly reports to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, beginning in January, 1932, indicate a fall of 26 per cent in hourly earnings from January, 1932, to January, 1933.

1934 Employment Rose

The average number of persons employed in the thirteen months preceding the strike in September, 1934, was 16 per cent greater than the average for the calendar year, 1932. Average weekly hours per employe were 12 per cent less, while average hourly earnings were 26 per cent greater.

Average weekly earnings in these thirteen months were $14.70 which was 9 per cent greater than for the calendar year 1932.

Average hourly earnings increased sharply for all types of labor under the President's Re-Employment Agreement and somewhat further under the Silk Code.

In August, 1933, the average for all workers in the industry were 37½ cents an hour, and by August, 1934, had increased to 40½ cents an hour.

The greatest hourly wage increases were made to workers in the lower-paid occupations. The earnings of the lowest-paid one-quarter of the workers advanced 74 per cent from April, 1933, to August, 1934.

Twenty-five per cent of all workers received more than 38½ cents an hour in April, 1933, and 59 cents in August, 1934, an increase of 53 per cent.

The average hourly earnings of loom-fixers increased by 48 per cent, whereas quillers, pickers, redrawers and bobbin boys had increases ranging from 78 to 100 per cent.

Under the administration of the code, there has been a narrowing of the wage differential between the most skilled and the least skilled groups.

The report shows that the proportion of the workers receiving less than the basic minimum rates was sharply decreased between August, 1933, and August, 1934.

The full-time weekly earnings of workers in all of the leading occupations for the industry as a whole were greater in August, 1934, than they had been for the longer maximum work-week prevailing in April, 1933.

The smallest increase in average full-time weekly earnings was 12 per cent in the case of the most highly skilled group of workers, loom-fixers. The least skilled occupations, separately analyzed, show an increase in full-time weekly earnings of approximately 40 per cent.

The actual average weekly earnings in all of the occupations analyzed were greater in August, 1934, than they had been in April, 1933. The increases in average actual weekly earnings range from 5 per cent in the case of loom-fixers and 25 per cent in the case of weavers, to increases of somewhat more than 40 per cent in the less skilled occupations. However, the report added:

"It should be noted that weekly earnings reached the low point of the depression in April, 1933, and that an increase of 17 per cent occurred by July, 1933, before the President's Re-employment Agreement became effective."

Union Rejects Cotton Curtailment

The cotton textile industry's plea for further curtailment of machine hours was rejected by the executive council of the United Textile Workers Union.

The proposal, offered as a means of correcting alleged unfavorable conditions in the operation of the mills, was met with a counter-proposal by the union for a hearing on the facts brought out by government investigations since the strike last September.

"We have been curtailed to the point of exhaustion," said the executive council in its statement, which was issued through President Thomas F. McMahon.

"Our wages have been slashed. Our people are in a state of semi-starvation. Machine hour curtailment might help the owners of the mills, but it would do it at the expense of the workers, who simply cannot and will not submit to further exploitation. They have reached the end of submission.

"We are not disposed to argue about this proposal. We have much sympathy with the plight of some mills, but by and large the condition of the industry, from the standpoint of management, is not such as to warrant any inroads on the slender earnings of those workers who have jobs."

Strange Way of Earning a Living

There are a few people in the world who employ very strange and bizarre means of earning a living, and Senor Lazaro, the strange native of Baracoa, Cuba, is one of them. Some performers chew up razor blades and eat them, others bite off morsels of light globes or water glasses and swallow whole mouthfuls, but Senor Lazaro mystifies his audience by putting large darning needles in his eye and taking them out of his mouth. There is no deception whatever in Lazaro's accomplishment, and he performs daily for his audiences in Havana.

The Giant Cigar

Work on the largest cigar ever made was completed by a Tampa, Florida, cigar-maker early in December after months of tedious labor putting together more than 25 pounds of filler and 250 wrapper leaves all specially secured for this special cigar. The finished product measures 92-½ inches in length and has a circumference of 12 inches. The giant smoke will be on exhibition in Tampa the latter part of February during the Cigar Industry Golden Jubilee celebration commemorating the 50th anniversary of the cigar industry in Tampa.

Roosevelt Starts Home Rule For The Philippines

of the Philippines before the end of the year.

"The Philippine Constitution provides for a republican form of government modeled after that of the United States. It places the responsibility for the administration of affairs in the islands in the hands of the Filipino people, subject only to such supervision in matters affecting foreign affairs and in specific instances concerning fiscal policy as is required to safeguard the continuing responsibilities of the United States in that country.

Islands to Have a President

"The present American Governor General will be succeeded by the President of the Commonwealth, to be elected by the Filipino people. The American Government will be represented in the Philippines by a High Commissioner, who will act as the representative of the President of the United States.

"Under the Philippine Constitution and the act of Congress authorizing it, the Philippine Commonwealth shall exist for ten years, and at the end of that time Philippine independence shall be recognized.

"The period of the Commonwealth was intended by Congress to permit the Filipino people gradually to adjust their economy to the changes which will come to them with independence and to prepare themselves adequately for their future responsibilities.

"The transition period was designed also to allow the laying of the foundation for a reciprocally beneficial trade relationship between the United States and the Philippines after independence. To this end Congress has authorized the President of the United States to call a conference of representatives of the two countries to formulate a plan looking to an arrangement along this line.

"It is our expectation that this conference will be called at an early date so that the economic situation in the Philippines may be stabilized and uncertainty as to the future removed.

"The Filipino people are deeply grateful to President Roosevelt for the favorable action taken by him on their Constitution. That he has done this within such a short time after the Constitution was submitted to him is another evidence of his generous interest in their behalf and his kindly feeling toward their welfare and freedom.

"This action of the President fortifies our faith in America and adds to our many obligations to the American people."

Reich's Secret Rearming Goes Back 15 Years

Hitler's Open Defiance Of Versailles Pact Seen As Logical Climax Of Policy

The military, naval and air clauses of the Versailles treaty, contained in Part V of that instrument and imposing drastic limitations on the armament of Germany were contained in five sections and fifty-four articles, setting down in detail just what armament would be permitted, and providing for supervision over it by the Military, Naval and Aeronautical Inter-Allied Commissions of Control, says an article by the New York Herald Tribune.

The military clauses provided for immediate demobilization of the German army, so that by March 31, 1920, "the German army must not comprise more than seven divisions of infantry and three divisions of cavalry." Thereafter there was to be a limitation of 100,000 men, including a maximum of 4,000 officers. This army was to be used exclusively to maintain order and patrol the German frontiers.

It was provided that the German General Staff be dissolved and not re-constituted in any form. The treaty went so far as to prescribe how the German high command might group its troops, with no more than two army corps headquarters staffs. The number of divisional depots and the number of troops serving in each were also limited.

There could be only one headquarters for an infantry division, no more than three regiments in it, each with a maximum of seventy officers and 2,800 men.

Munitions Also Limited

Beyond this the munitions in the hands of these troops was to be limited. An infantry division could have 12,000 rifles, 108 heavy machine guns, 162 light machine guns, 9 medium trench mortars, 27 light trench mortars and 36 pieces of light field artillery. A maximum also was prescribed for the rounds of ammunition they might possess at any one time, 400 rounds being permitted for each rifle, 1,134 for light machine guns and 288 rounds for each piece of light artillery.

"Universal compulsory military service shall be abolished in Germany," said Article 173 of the treaty. "The German army may only be constituted and recruited by means of voluntary enlistment." It was stipulated that enlistments should be for twelve years, and that discharges before and end of enlistment periods should not in any case exceed 5 per cent of the total effectives. Officers in the army were required to engage to serve twenty-five years.

"Educational establishments, the universities, societies of discharged soldiers, shooting or touring clubs and, generally speaking, associations of every description, whatever the age of their members, must not occupy themselves with any military matters," read another article. "In particular, they will be forbidden to instruct or exercise their members in the profession or use of arms."

Similar restrictions called for demolition of fortifications, limited naval vessels to thirty-six, of which six were to be battleships and six light cruisers; and provided that the armed forces of Germany should not include any airplanes. The manufacture of war materials was forbidden except in specified factories, and the export or import of war materials prohibited. The manufacture of gas for war purposes or the use of gas by the army was prohibited.

Others Promised to Disarm

One sentence at the beginning of Part V of the Versailles treaty has since given Germany the basis for maintaining she was within her rights in re-arming. The sentence read: "In order to render possible the initiation of a general limitation of the armaments of all nations, Germany undertakes strictly to observe the military, naval and air clauses, which follow."

Since numerous disarmament conferences have resulted in stalemate, and there has been continuous evidence of increase in armaments by virtually every nation since the Versailles Treaty, and while the disarmament discussions were proceeding, the Germans have argued that no disarmament from Berlin could be anything else than a punitive and humiliating measure imposed by armed nations beyond her borders. Hitler brought out into the open the proposition that Germany had a right to equality in armament with other powers, with the Germen people apparently solidly behind him.

Long before this demand for equality ever was voiced, however, German diplomacy, exercised at international conferences of Ambassadors, and at the League of Nations, was engaged in whittling down the restrictions of treaty on German armament. At the Spa conference of 1920, little more than a year after the Versailles Treaty was signed, Germany obtained sufficient modification of the military provisions to enable her to arm and drill her state police force, and in view of revolutionary threats, then rumbling through Europe, raised that force from 80,000 to 140,000 men. She thereby more than doubled her army effectives.

In May, 1926, at a conference in Paris, Germany received the right to build commercial airplanes of all kinds, "provided they are not armored, or armed, or capable of being turned into military machines," a provision impossible to enforce. There were relaxations also by the Conference of Ambassadors on the restrictions of German munition making so that by 1928 Germany was exporting arms valued at £150,000,000. In 1930, according to the League of Nations annual report, Germany exported arms valued at £1,765,000.

Arms Exports Growing

By 1930 British and American airplane interests began to find German competition keen in the sale of military airplanes, these planes being only slightly altered from the commercial planes the Germans were using, and military experts were pointing out the magnificent design of some of the big Junkers planes for bombing purposes.

In a recent debate in the House of Commons, it was conceded that Germany had more than 1,000 planes easily adaptable to military purposes, and Stanley Baldwin, former Prime Minister, electrified England by declaring the nation's border, because of aviation, was on the Rhine. On March 11 came the dramatic announcement by General Hermann Wilhelm Goering in Berlin, that hereafter all the sports flying clubs would be attached to the regular army. Germany had acquired a military air force, in direct contradiction to the terms of the treaty.

Limitations on the German navy prompted Germany to build the "pocket battleship" of 10,000 tons, said to be the fastest and most powerfully armed battleships afloat. Three of these are in commission and a fourth is soon to be laid down. With a treaty allowance of six light cruisers, Germany has built six new ones. The latest one, the "Nurnberg," can outspeed by five knots the fastest light cruisers in the French navy, according to the French.

The rise in military man-power, acctually trained for service, was accelerated by the Nazis' fight for power against similar semi-military bands of Communists, and against the Steel Helmets.

Puerto Rico Out To Revive Land Holdings Limit

Liberal Party Bill Aims To Enforce 500-Acre Farm Law Set Up In 1900

It appears certain that Puerto Rico's 500-acre land-holding law, a dead letter since its passage by Congress thirty-five years ago, is about to become through enforcement the basis for a new land policy that will alter economic and social conditions radically. Leaders of all legislative groups are committed to this experiment in enforcement, and bills looking to this end have been introduced into both houses.

The land law was passed by Congress as a resolution in May, 1900, when civil government was inaugurated in Puerto Rico, declares W. F. O'Rerly in a recent despatch from San Juan, Puerto Rico, to the New York Herald Tribune. The act was regarded as an attempt by the Federal government to prevent recurrence in the Philippines of a condition similar to the Friars' land situation, but it applied equally to Puerto Rico.

Law Without Penalties

It provided that no corporation should be authorized to conduct the buying and selling of real estate or to hold or own real estate except as might be reasonably necessary to allow it to carry out the purpose for which it was created and that corporations engaging in agriculture should be restricted by their charters to the ownership of not more than 500 acres; but it made no mention of enforcement machinery nor penalties.

The inclusion by reference of the Congressional resolution of 1900 in the insular organic act of 1917 added nothing to its effectiveness.

The law was considered highly inimical to the development and operation of the sugar cane industry, which began its flourishing career with the American occupation, and no serious effort was ever made to enforce it. On the contrary, there has been consistent growth in the size of corporate and individual land holdings.

Huge Holdings Cited

Professor Rafael Fernandez Garcia, member of the Puerto Rican "brain trust" which prepared the Chardon reconstruction plan, recently said that out of the 20,549 acres in the particularly fertile section of the island 60,000 acres out of 65,000 belong to four owners.

Senators Antonio R. Barcelo and Luis Munoz Marin, of the Liberal party, have drawn up a measure which they describe as the "land act of Puerto Rico." They say that its purpose is to end the holding and exploitation of land in excess of 500 acres by any person or corporation, and to prevent the reappearance of a similar condition.

Absentees Bill's Target

"The concentration of land," says the bill, "has created a serious social condition, putting the main sources of livelihood of the people under the control of large interests, the majority of them absentees. The great mass of the farmers and laborers are suffering from a hopeless situation, the former tending to become laborers and the laborers to become beggars, while the proceeds of the work done by Puerto Ricans becomes to a large extent absentee capital instead of becoming buying power that protects them against hunger, nakedness and the weather."

The bill classifies as felonies deliberate attempts to impede the operation of the 500-acre provision, and reserves to the people of Puerto Rico or any governmental corporation the right to acquire and hold land in excess of the statutory limitation.

This reservation is in the interest of the reconstruction plan proposed by Chancellor Carlos E. Chardon and his associates in their report to the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior. The proposals call for public sugar centrales, which would entail ownership or utilization of many thousands of acres.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

The Bearded Queen Equilibrist

Zephyrine Saqui began to perform on the high rope at the age of one year and continued as the favorite aerobat of Europe until the age of 78. She performed for the French mobs that destroyed the Bastille, she continued under the Directoire and the Empire. In time she married and raised a family but kept on balancing in the air surrounded by three generations of her own offspring. By some queer coincidence she grew a beard in mature years, and admiring crowds traveled from great distances to watch the performance of "La Dame Barbue". She was a great trouper and performed before the crowned heads of Europe. At the age of 78 she traversed the high rope standing on her head with her dancing feet in the air.

Copper Profit In War Revealed In Arms Probe

Committee Not Critical Of Baruch's Record, Nye Declares

Drawing on records of the World War, members of the U.S. Senate munitions investigating committee recently attempted to convince Bernard M. Baruch, former chairman of the War Industries Board, that his scheme for fixing prices and taxing war profits could be evaded by profiteers.

Mr. Baruch, however, had faith that his plan, which he described as in general agreement with the one advanced by the committee, would be successful in eliminating war profits, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

Senator Bennett C. Clark (D) of Missouri spent most of the morning showing how the copper interests had staged a "hold-up" of the Government for a 10 per cent profit, in the midst of the war, while Stephen Raushenbush, committee investigator, referred to enormous difficulties of attempting to determine valuation on which to levy excess profits taxes.

Instances of Profiteering

Mr. Baruch admitted that there were instances of profiteering after the price-fixing committee began its work in the World War, but said the Government generally managed to limit profits to a fair level.

At the outset of the hearing, Senator James F. Byrnes (D) of South Carolina appeared at his own request to defend Mr. Baruch's wartime record, explaining how the financier had spent $85,000 out of his own pocket to send a mission from the War Industries Board to Great Britain to make studies that saved the Government millions of dollars and how he later paid the fare of women employees of the board returning to their homes so they would not be stranded in the capital without jobs.

"Other men may have used their position to get wealth, but this man used his wealth to serve the Government," said Senator Byrnes.

Income Report Explained

The Senator was assured by Senator Gerald P. Nye (R) of North Dakota that the committee was not critical of Mr. Baruch's war record. It was explained that an earlier disclosure that certain of Mr. Baruch's income tax records had been destroyed was later explained by the Bureau of Internal Revenue as a matter of ordinary routine.

Senator Nye asked Mr. Baruch's advice as to how the Government should deal with the Colt Firearms Company, sole manufacturers of machine guns in the United States, which yesterday had their NRA Blue Eagle taken away because they ignored Section 7A of the National Recovery Act. Mr. Nye said he had been informed that the War Department intended to continue receiving guns from the Colt Company until the present contract expired.

Mr. Baruch advocated that the Government enlarge its own munitions plans to manufacture the guns itself.

Declaring himself unfamiliar with the attempt of copper interests to hold up the Government for higher prices during the war, Mr. Baruch said there were "innumerable" contracts showing such efforts. Asked about a statement made by copper producers to the effect that they could not get anyone to produce at the price set by the Government, Mr. Baruch declared, "We could have put that on a phonograph with every industry." He chided committee members for their lack of faith in business men to co-operate in time of war.

Mr. Baruch said he did not believe a constitutional amendment would be necessary to enable the Government to confiscate profits in time of war.

"We can deprive a man of his life in wartime without having the question of constitutionality raised," commented Senator Homer T. Bone (D) of Washington, "but if we try to take the property of the Anaconda Copper Company, for instance, we get into a long legal argument."

"I am satisfied that it is constitutional to take property and fix prices in time of war," said Mr. Baruch. He expressed opposition to bonuses in time of war, and said he would favor the elimination of tax-exempt bonds.

Mr. Raushenbush charged that the Treasury refused to reopen the copper tax case after the war, because of the deflated condition of the industry, despite an opinion from Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, in 1922 that a fair tax had not been paid, because of excessive valuation charged for invested capital and depletion.

Mr. Baruch said he opposed to fixing return on the basis of investment because capital might have been unwisely invested. He recommended that it be based on a percentage basis of the output of the entire industry and services given.

Because of difficulties respecting valuation, Mr. Raushenbush pointed out many tax cases growing out of war profits were not settled until as late as 1929. Such delays, he indicated, might obviate the "pay-as-you-fight" plan of paying for war out of taxes, advanced by both Mr. Baruch and the committee's adviser John T. Flynn.

House Of Lords Discusses Orient

Debate In British Upper House On Govt. Policy

In the House of Lords on April 3 Lord Pell raised a fairly well attended debate on the situation in the Far East, where, without saying anything provocative to Japan, he detected a movement towards a rapprochement between China and Japan and the exclusion of Europe from Asia. He suggested that it might be possible for this country, with its vast interests in China, to offer mediation so as to avoid trouble between Japan and Russia, and the greater, if more remote, danger of an Asiatic separatist movement, states a report in the Times, London.

Need of Expansion

Lord Newton and the Duke of Atholl both made very full allowances for Japan's need of expansion, and paid a tribute to the great improvement which her influence had brought about in Manchoukuo. Lord Glasgow expressed some concern about the postponement of the delimitation of the frontier between Burma and China—a postponement which, he hinted, might have been procured by Japanese influence.

Lord Lothian did not despair of solving Far Eastern problems. It was not possible, he thought, to renew the Anglo-Japanese alliance, because of the hostility of the Dominions; but it ought to be possible to renew the spirit of the Washington Treaties—the wisest made since the War. Their principle was recognition of the integrity of China. Japan had taken unilateral action, and that had caused distrust. But it was better to face facts and call a conference of the Powers concerned for full and frank discussion.

These suggestions were supported by Lord Marley, who showed a more impartial attitude towards Japan than his party usually adopts, and who pointed out that Russia was now an influence for peace in the Far East.

Chinese Finance

Lord Stanhope, replying for the Government, reported that the economic situation in China was serious. The British Government had not been able to support a request for a loan which would have had a purely temporary effect; but they would consider, with a sympathetic desire to help, a forthcoming Chinese report on the whole situation. He did not think that any suggestion of helping by proposing to act as mediator between China and Japan would be welcome. But the Government warmly welcomed the better relations between Japan and Russia, and thought it more effective to favor quickly such efforts to improve international relations than to propose dramatic steps. Finally Lord Stanhope explained that the delay in starting the delimination of the Sino-Burmese frontier was due only to the fact that the dry season did not start until November.

Pilot And Shogun

Franciscan monk belonging to the order of the 'Osservanti dell annunziata del Guastato.'"

On reaching Rome the ambassadors were received by the Pope with great pomp, and they then presented to him Daté's letter:

"I, Daté Masamune, King of Oshu in the empire of Japan, while kissing, with the most profound submission and reverence the feet of His Holiness Paul the Great, the universal and Holy Father of the world, say as a supplicant:

"Father Luigi Sotelo, a monk of the order of St. Francis, having come to my kingdom and here preached the Catholic faith to my subjects, has called upon me. I have thus by his means been enabled to get a good insight of your religion, as he exposed to me the numerous mysteries connected with Christian rites and ceremonies.

"I have impressed these doctrines upon my heart, for I found them to be true and salutary and would not have hesitated openly to profess them, if certain arguments had not hindered, and invincible motives had not forcibly kept me from so doing.

"But if I am personally prevented for the moment, I desire that at least my subject may now become Christians. With this end in view, I beg Your Holiness will send me monks of the order of St. Francis, called of the 'Osservanza,' whom I pledge my word to harbour and to protect, being assured that they will be venerated by my subjects. I also beg Your Holiness to condescend in giving them privileges, favours and anything that might contribute to their success. As to me, from the very moment they shall set foot on my territory, I shall consider myself duty bound to protect them, to assist them in erecting their convents, and grant all privileges that are in my power.

"I, moreover, beg Your Holiness will kindly dispose of, govern, and establish within my dominions anything Your Holiness might think useful for the propagation of the holy laws of God; and especially designate and appoint a great prelate through whose zeal and under whose direction all the inhabitants might be converted without delay to the Christian religion. As to the expenses of the prelate and the competency to be assigned to him, Your Holiness need not mind, as I shall abundantly provide for him, wishing to assume the entire responsibility for this step. . . .

"Above all I entreat you to pray the almighty God so that I may be acceptable to His divine majesty. Were there anything in our country which would be useful or agreeable to you, please let us know, and we shall do everything in our power to satisfy your desire. For the present, I simply beg Your Holiness to accept a few modest gifts which I send you with the greatest reverence and respect. For all the rest we thoroughly rely in our Ambassadors and shall ratify anything they may conclude in our name."

Pope Paul the Fifth replied to this letter that he would consult his nuncio in Spain and see what he could do toward fulfilling Daté's requests. He presented Hasekura with a thousand gold ducats and with many religious objects, some of them very valuable. The municipality of Rome solemnly invested him with the dignity of a Roman patrician and senator.

Prevented by the pressure of time from a visit to Venice, the embassy sent thither one of their suite who was a Venetian by birth, Father Mattia. The Venetian Senate not only defrayed his expenses but presented him with gifts for Daté consisting of a gold chain and a medal of St. Mark, a crucifix, and two silver lamps.

This embassy was absent from Japan nearly seven years. When finally Hasekura's guns were heard firing off the coast opposite Sendai, the number of his companions had been reduced from sixty to twelve. Violent anti-Christian edicts were being enforced; Daté himself was making diabolical attempts to stamp out Christianity in his own principality. Hasekura and his twelve companions were ordered to recant, but he refused to do so—at least temporarily—and was not persecuted. Sotelo, however, was less fortunate. Detained for two years in Manila, on reaching Nagasaki he was seized and burned at the stake.

Thus Daté's superb embassy, while a tragic failure, was perhaps the most colourful episode in Japan's "Christian century." To say that there were elements of mystery about it is to understate an obvious fact.

The Plow Paradox

The so-called Wood Plow was not made of wood but of cast iron. It was named after Jethro Wood of Scipio, New York who, on Sept. 1, 1819, took out a patent for an im proved cast iron plow in which the moldboard, share and landside we re cast in three separate pieces wh ich could be replaced by new parts when the old ones wore out. A few years later the Wood Plow was improved by steel being substituted for cast iron. But Jethro Wood re mained the father of the American type of plow, having given his entire life to advocate its use.

The Animal of 50 Stomachs

The Paramecium is a slipper-shaped animalcule of the infusoria family. It is very common in pond water and in infusions of decaying vegetable matter. It is covered with a large number of cilia (lashes) which propel it through the water and drive food particles with water bubbles into the apertures serving as mouths. There are 50 digestive departments serving as stomachs where the food particles are either digested or eliminated. These multiply by division, until they grow so small that a conjunction of two specimens has to be resorted to.

Australia Has Fine Mounted Police Unit

Work As Exciting As That Of Canada's Famous Corps

Australia has relatively unheralded mounted police whose lives are as adventurous and romantic as any chronicled of the Royal North West Mounted in Canada, says the Sydney correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor.

The latter battle their greatest patrols through icy wastes; the Australian mounted patrol the desert wastes on the borders of Western and Central Australia, the rocky fastnesses of the Kimberleys, the lonely distances of the Northern Territory, the tropical jungles and sunlit Gulf of Carpentaria country in Northern Queensland, and the grim ranges and plains of the north of South Australia.

A member of these Northern Territory Mounted Police recently made history "to get his man." He chartered an airplane so that he might arrest a fugitive after a sea flight of 140 miles.

Valueless Checks

Someone had been passing valueless checks in Central Australia and the Northern Territory. As practically all transactions in those territories are by check, it is essential for the authorities to stop anything that tends to throw doubt on the honesty of the check system. The police therefore regarded the offenses seriously, and they learned that the offender had left Darwin for Bathurst Island, 70 miles to the north, where the only inhabitants are missionaries and aborigines.

How to reach him was the problem. It was the monsoon season, and to arrange for a lugger and go by it to Bathurst Island would have meant days of valuable time. So Mounted Constable Koop left in a plane belonging to Pilot Ronald Cropley, of a gold-mining company. So the Territory Mounted Police, who have followed many a dry stage in the inland, and have journeyed by train, car, horse, mule and camel, hit a new trail—the air trail—along the route that the Australia-England air mail takes.

Plane to the Chase

After less than four hours of flying over the sea, Barthurst Island was in view. The plane landed at the mission station. Bearded, fierce aborigines encircled the plane while Constable Koop walked off to talk to the man he wished to see. Then came breakfast of kangaroo steak and eggs with the missionaries. Afterwards, with another passenger, the plane left on the return flight to Darwin.

From departure to return, the plane took three hours and 25 minutes. If the police had battled in a lugger across the sea it would have taken at least four days.

The most famous adventures of the Northern Mounted are soon to be retold in book form by Ion Idriess, noted writer of Australia's great "outback." Mr. Indriess has wandered in the wild places for 25 year. He has just traveled 11,000 miles to make sure of the facts and the background for his new book of the "frontier," dealing mainly with stirring episodes in the pursuit of lawbreakers in Australia's primitive lands.

Policy Of U.S. On Neutrality In Draft Form

Nye Munitions Committee Studies Plans To Keep Nation Out Of War

The Nye munitions committee was recently considering the texts of four draft resolutions designed to keep the United States neutral in the event of a foreign war.

The committee's decision to sponsor the far-reaching change in foreign policy is not yet made, despite President Roosevelt's open invitation—delivered privately to the committee last week—to go ahead on the subject of neutrality. Much depends on the form of the resolutions, and this is not yet determined, says the Washington correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor whose article follows:

While this decision was in the making, it became known that the Navy Department several months ago went on record strongly opposing a new neutrality policy which would yield in advance any American claims to "freedom of the seas." The Navy advice, furnished to the State Department when its study of neutrality was under way, was generally negative. It is presumed that the War Department shares these views, although it is primarily a naval matter.

Adjustments Needed

Whether President Roosevelt takes sharp issue with his own Navy Department—his favorite—cannot be definitely said. Although the Chief Executive has urged various authorities to go ahead with a neutrality study, it is not clear how far he will go in pledging withdrawal of governmental or naval protection from American commerce in the event of war. All the indications are that he supports a strong program, and if so there may be some adjustment between his views and those of the Navy Department.

One important detail which the Nye committee is working on in executive session turns on whether the new policy of neutrality shall be discretionary with the President or mandatory upon him. As initially drafted, the resolutions were mandatory, this being the view of several authorities on the subject—notably Charles A. Beard, whose book "The Open Door at Home" evolved a policy of enlightened neutrality and Charles Warren Assistant Attorney General under Woodrow Wilson, who is the chief American authority on the subject.

Mandatory or Permissive

The average senatorial commentator is of two minds on this important choice. On the one hand, the advantages of a mandatory policy in preventing American participation in war are obvious, and such a course would leave less discretion with the President, which is a growing demand of Congress. But on the other hand, the very rigidity of the mandatory policy—involving as it does a commitment on future decisions—is attacked by many Senators, notably of the isolationist school. The choice is a difficult one for them to make.

The navy made its decision against the new neutrality policy known after extensive canvassing of its war plans division and the war college. Relinquishment of neutral rights, it was felt, involve giving up or seriously jeeopardizing one of the three bases of sea power, which are the navy itself, naval bases and merchant marine.

The basic precept of American naval purpose—after the protection of the United States itself—is the protection of American interests abroad, and that includes commercial and economic interests in the seven seas.

Will Report Monday

The Nye committee members were furnished with drafts of resolutions by Senator Nye, and over the weekend are studying them for report on Monday. The resolutions are intended to be simply a short-cut to new neutrality policy, and not a full revision of statutes on the subject. Senator Nye, explaining their purposes, says:

"The problem has many ramifications requiring the closest study and deliberation. But we believe that something should be done at once to start the ball rolling and for that reason we have planned to deal with several of the aspects. There is no reason why this country should be involved in a foreign war because a citizen, on personal or highly profitable business, ventures into the war area and gets hurt.

"The same is true of American shipping. I probably would go further than some of my colleagues. I would absolutely forbid the export of any commodities, regardless of their nature, to a belligerent in any ship bearing the American flag. If belligerent nations want our commodities, let them come here for them and take all the risk.

"I have high hopes that the American people will become aroused to their precarious situation due to our policy of drifting along. I have no doubt that once they understand the situation, they will support a strict program of neutrality, even though it eliminates profits out of the warfare of other people."

Pilot And Shogun

and look after my affairs. Isn't it the very height of folly for you to talk of hara-kiri?' 'Were I twenty years younger,' he replied to me, 'I might do as you say. But I am eighty years old. From my youth up I have been a man of war, fighting now with his army and now with that. One of my eyes has been destroyed by a sword cut; several of my fingers have been injured; I am a cripple. There is hardly a disability from which men suffer that I have not experienced; there are few things left that I can do, so crippled have I become. All this has been borne for your sake, and while you live, I feel I have something to live for. Under your fostering care I have plodded on all these years. While you live my name too will be known and feared. If you die I feel certain the surrounding barons will attack and destroy your house, and when this comes about people may well ask, "Why did old Honda consent to remain in the world after his master was dead to see all this trouble?" I will never outlive the prosperity of my master!' So I said to him that he was right. He called in the doctor of whom he had spoken, who burnt my carbuncle and cured it. Now, Anjin, go send in the doctor!"

Will thanked him, and did as he was bid. It was thus the two old friends parted. The physician gave Iyeyasu, just as Will had hoped, a new lease of life, although a short one. They never saw each other again. . . .

Cocks, who had a fancy for the drama, came down to the Sea Adventure with two or three London plays in his hand as she was about to weigh anchor.

"They might amuse you," he said somewhat confusedly to Will, ashamed of his own kindness, as he laid them down. "The oldest of them stirred up a turmoil—in connection with Essex—though it's called Richard Second. The other's a strange sort of tragedy, Hamlet. They're by the same playwright. I saw them both in the new Globe ere we left London. This is the newest, come by the last ship—Winter's Tale."

Will thanked him, and thought of the playwright with the golden voice who had helped him escape through the back door of Mermaid Tavern. Later, alone in his junk at Bangkok, he was amazed and excited to discover in the speech of Polonius to his son the identical words he had carried about with him so long that he now knew them by heart. Then, and not until then, he knew that he had once supped with Shakespear.

Soviet-Chinese Non-Aggression Pact Considered

Plan For Trade Treaty Dropped Some Years Ago Also Being Taken Up

Nippon Dempo

SHANGHAI, April 22—A non-aggression pact is being considered between the Chinese and Soviet authorities, it was revealed by the Soviet Ambassador to China, Mr. Mogolomov, on his return here this morning on board the Dollar liner President Harrison, in a press interview held on board the boat.

The ambassador also said that the negotiations between the Nanking authorities and the Soviet government for the conclusion of a trade treaty between China and the U.S.S.R. were dropped some years ago. The issue has now been taken up by the parties concerned.

The Chinese Ambassador to Moscow, Dr. W. W. Wen, has been conducting negotiations with the Soviet government for the conclusion of a non-aggression pact between the two countries, Ambassador Mogolomov added.

The Soviet envoy, it is learned, is scheduled to go to Nanking in a few days.

Irish Sweep Prizes Hit By British Law

Sales In England Lower But Gain Elsewhere

In the battle between the Irish Sweepstakes promoters and the British, the Irish are losing ground. This was admitted by Viscount Powerscourt at the opening draw for the Grand National sweep in the gayly decorated Plaza Hall in Dublin on March 26. The actual prize fund for this sweep amounts to £1,680,979 against £1,930,148 last year.

But if British sales slumped heavily, the prize-winning names announced that day disclosed that sweepstakes authorities made good most of their losses to Britain by increased sales to the United States and the Continent. The percentage of American winners in this sweep was almost equal to that of British at former sweeps, according to the New York Times.

Only a handful of British journalists attended the drawing against the large groups of British journalists and camera men who heretofore flocked to Dublin for each drawing.

If British journalists were absent, however, the radio was much in evidence during the entire proceedings, the results being broadcast continuously from the Irish Free State's high-power station to British listeners.

To safeguard the interests of prize-winners in Britain and Canada, in view of the recent enactments, the device was adopted merely of giving the name and the continent. So one heard a succession of announcements such as: "'Happy Willie,' Europe"; "'Lucky Five,' Europe"; "Mr. Smith, Canada."

Winners in London, Liverpool, Paris or Berlin were all classed as Europe to prevent their identity from being disclosed. Names and addresses of American winners were given in full, as were those in a few other countries.

Admitting the British Lottery and Betting Act had been very effectively used against the present sweep, Lord Powerscourt said:

"We have lost many supporters of our sweepstakes. We are sorry that has happened. We are sorry for them as well as for ourselves. The sporting public in England has been denied a little gamble which, in the words of Winston Churchill, was the most harmless form of gambling he knew of.

"The sweepstakes have brought happiness into many homes and there are many ways of losing money than by subscribing to a sweepstake, particularly when it is doing good for the sick and poor."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Fulfilled Prophecy

The Turkish Empire began with Sultan Mohammed II, surnamed the Conqueror, who captured 2 empires, 12 kingdoms and 300 towns, and planted the green banner of the Prophet on the walls of Constantinople on May 29, 1453. As the Sultan entered the conquered city at the head of 250,000 troops, the Greek inhabitants, half expecting a miracle, congregated praying in the the church of St. Sophia. The conqueror rode into the church on horseback ordering a mullah to repeat the formula of the Moslem faith from the pulpit. At this sacrilege the Patriarch of the Greek Church invoked a curse upon the Emperor to the effect that the Empire which began with Mohammed might end with Mohammed. This is the legend.

Seventy years later the celebrated Turkish poet Rewami transformed the legend into a prophecy, pointing out that as the name Mohammed can never cease among the faithful, the Empire would last forever. Rewami's prophecy, written 4 centuries before, was fulfilled on November 2, 1922, when the Sutanate was abolished by the Turkish National Assembly in Angora and Mohammed VI, the last of the Sultans, fled abroad a British ship to Malta.

The Man's Prayer

Every pious Jew blesses his Creator every morning for not having created him a woman. The Jewish woman is required to vary this morning prayer by substituting "Blessed art thou O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has created me according to His Will."

Grass Grows 10 Ft. High In Australian Cloudbursts

While parts of the United States were suffering from appalling dust storms in March, North Australia is being visited by phenomenal rainstorms.

These rains, marking the end of the wet season and called by the natives "knock them down" rains, were the most intense in years, according to the New York Times. They are knocking flat all vegetation throughout the territory.

In Darwin hot sunshine between rains caused grass to grow ten feet high in the gutters. Householders hired aborigines at a dollar a day to pull up grass from their yards, where it is growing almost as high as the houses with jungle rankness.

plays the leading role of Mary Howard. Miss Ann Todd played the part in the London performance and Miss Farieda Inescort did the part in New York. Mrs. George has a difficult task as the novelist, and in loss skilful hands the continued harping on the theme of her novel and its application in real life would tend to monotony. Mrs. George is proving herself as the one person in the Tokyo foreign community who could handle this part. In her rehearsals she cleverly avoids the pitfalls of the part and plays with a naturalness and an earnest charm that will be a real treat for the community to see.

The four males parts in the comedy are being capably filled by some of the community's most experienced men actors. The part of Rogers Woodruff, so capably developed in London by Cecil Ramage and in New York by Herbert Rwalinson will be played Mr. Morris N. Hughes of the Amercan Embasy. In this role Mr. Hughes represents the pubilsher whose fascination for women is so irresistible. His rehearasals shows he will act the part with incision and authority. Jimmie Lee, the blunt, outspoken, humorous man of the world, a part made famous by Owen Nares in London, of whom there is no more finished light comedian on the contemporary stage, and Walter Abel in New York, is played by Mr. J. Francis Harris, whose past ADC performances indicate that he will develop the possibilities of this role.

r. Ashley Clark of the British Embassy will play the part of Walter Manners, the tame cat interior decorator, so well done by Ivan Samson in London and Robert Lowes in New York, while the part of the efferescent French manservant will be handled by Mr. Jean Millot. In London, the part of Pierre was played by Boris Ranevsky and in New York by Auguste Aramini.

The New York performance was produced by Mr. John Golden while the London presentation was done by the authorsess herself. Here in Tokyo the production and staging has been placed on the capable shoulders of Mr. J. Roy McKenlay, whose all-round ability with past ADC performance assures a most excellent for the theatre going public. The Box office sales of tickets is now open at the Imperial Hotel.

proaching death and especially on his apotheosis he cannily selected the most beautiful spot in Japan for his tomb and told Hidetada of his choice.

From time immemorial Nikko had been a place of shrines, for the Japanese are worshippers of beauty, so wherever among the mountains they have discovered a secluded spot tapestried with verdure and canopied with the gloom of lofty trees they have marked it off as holy. Nikko is all of that and more. In the spring the cherries blossom on its verdant floor, in autumn the maples weave a brocade of crimson and gold upon its mountainous walls, and always a silver torrent leaps and roars and plunges beneath its sacred red bridge.

As Will stood on the common grey bridge which spans the river just below the other, a begging priest came by to whom he put the question,

"Why two bridges where one would serve?"

Knowing him to be the famous Anjin San, the dead Shogun's friend, the old priest rested upon his staff and said:

"Long ago a great-hearted King came to Nikko River and looked across at the trees, up-stream at the torrent and hills whence it came, and down-stream at the softer outlines of the crops and spurs of wooded mountains. 'It needs only a dash of colour in the foreground to bring this all together,' said he, and he put a little child in a blue and white dressing-gown under the awful trees to judge the effect. Emboldened by his tenderness, an aged beggar ventured to ask for alms. Now it was the ancient privilege of the great to try the temper of their blades upon beggars and such cattle. Mechanically the king swept off the old man's head, for he did not wish to be disturbed. The blood spurted across the granite slabs of the riverford in a sheet of purest vermilion. The king smiled. Chance had solved the problem for him. 'Build a bridge here,' he said to the court carpenter, 'of just such a colour as that stuff on the stones. Build also a bridge of grey stone close by, for I would not forget the wants of my people.' So he gave the little child across the stream a thousand pieces of gold and went his way. As for the blood, they wiped it up and said no more about it; and that is the story of Nikko Bridge."

Will dropped a gift into the old priest's bowl, and climbed the hill that leads to Iyeyasu's tomb.

First buried on Mount Kuno near Suruga, within a year he had been apotheosised as "The Orient-Illuminating Prince" and all the opulent resources of the time mobilized to construct for him a worthy mausoleum. At its dedication an Imperial Envoy had presided and the Sutra of the Lotus of the Law had been recited ten thousand times by a multitude of priests. But Will now stood before the princely memorial alone. The sun filtered down on him through the deeply solemn green of the sky-soaring cryptomeria, his only companions. They brought down to him from the heavens a soft mournful murmur that intensified the impression made by the old priest's story, impelling him to think of eternity and of men's short inch of time. He remembered his dead friend, his strength and his pride and his splendour, and reflected on the handful of ashes that now lay within an urn. He had brought with him one of the Shakespear tragedies, because certain majestic words in it had scored themselves in his memory. They seemed to him the most moving words about death that could ever be uttered. He took the book as he stood, and again read them, with no audience but the lofty trees:

"Within the hollow crown
"That rounds the mortal temples of a king
"Keeps death his court; and there the antic sits,
"Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp;
"Allowing him a breath, a little scene,
"To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
"Infusing him with self and vain conceit,—
"As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
"Were brass impregnable; and humour'd thus,
"Comes at the last, and with a little pin
"Bores through his castle-wall, and—
"farewell king!"

"It is not mockery," muttered the old pilot when he had done reading the marvellous lines, "but just the stark truth!"

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Ship That Walked

In January 1893 an inundation of catastrophic proportions swelled the waters of the Brisbane River near Brisbane, Australia, rising so rapidly that within a single hour the level of the river was 12 feet higher than during any previous inundation. As the waters overflowed they destroyed hundreds of houses in their path, causing more than $10,000,000 damages. The most bizaare feature of the deluge was a 1000 ton ship that was carried from the mouth of the river 24 miles away into the center of the city of Brisbane. When the waters receded they left the steamer stranded high and dry in the midst of the splendid Botanical Gardens of the city, where it remained for several months until removed.

KOKUSAI BUNKA SHINKOKAI SPONSORING LECTURES

Dr. John H. Wigmore, dean emeritus of law at Northwestern University, will give a series of six lectures on "The World's Legal System" which he will illustrate with 700 colored lantern slides, under the auspices of the Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai and Keio University.

The first lecture will be held May 3 at 7 p.m. at the main lecture hall of Keio University. The topic will be "Egypthian, Babylonian, Hebrew and Chinese Legal Systems."

The second lecture, at the same place at 7 p.m. Tuesday May 7, will be on the topic, "Hindu, Greek, and Roman Legal Systems."

The last three lectures, on May 14, 17, and 21, will be held at the Lecture hall of the School of Technology at the Tokyo Imperial University. The fourth lecture will be on "Celtic and Slavic Legal Systems."

The fifth lecture will be devoted to "Germanic, Maritime, and Ecclesiastical Legal Systems." The last lecture will be "Romanesque and Anglican Legal Systems."

Invitations to the series have been extended by Count Aisuke Kabayama, chairman of the board of directors of the Kokusai Bunka Shinkokai, and Dr. Shinzo Koizumi, president of Keio University.

Regarding the lectures, Dr. Wigmore explained:

"The purpose of these lectures is to interest the professional as well as the general public in the world's legal history and comparative law. This is perhaps the first attempt to apply in the field of Legal History the method now so widely used in other branches of knowledge—the lecture with colored lantern-pictures.

"The sixteen principal legal systems, past and present, form the subject—Egyptian, Babylonian, Hebrew, Chinese, Hindu, Greek, Roman, Japanese Mohammedan, Martime, Ecclesiastical, Celtic, Slavic, Germanic, Romanesque, Anglican.

"For each series are shown between twenty-five and seventy-five pictures, connected by the lecturer's narrative exposition. In each series, the pictures present the edifices in which Law and Justice were dispensed (whether temples, palaces, tents, courthouses, or city-gates); the principal men of law (whether kings, priests, legislators, judges, jurists, or advocates); and the chief types of legal records (whether codes, statutes, deeds, contracts, treatises, or judicial decisions). By these aids, the narrative attempts to reconstruct some principal impressions of the legal life of these peoples. Subsequent study of the book-learning about the details of these systems can thus be made more realistic and intelligent.

"The pictures have been gathered by the lecturer during many years past, by research, and by travel in numerous countries. Some of the photographs were taken specially for this purpose.

"The facsimiles of manuscripts, from the archaeological and historical records of various countries, include the oldest court record, the oldest will, the oldest promissory note, the oldest codes, extant in the world; the manuscripts of Gaius' Institutes and Justinian's Digest, of the Lex Salica and the Sachsenspiegel, of Gratian's Decretum, of the Koran and the earliest Islamic law-treatise, of typical deeds and contracts in the Egyptian, Hebrew, Germanic, Roman, Hindu, Islamic, and other systems.

"The printed facsimiles include the first or early editions of Justinian's Code, of the Code Napoleon, of Coke's Institutes, etc., etc.

"The views of buildings and places are taken, for the ancient systems, exclusively from archaeologists' or artists' restorations (not ruins), and are colored in pursuance to authentic directions.

"The portraits (ideal or veritable) include the most famous judges, jurists, advocates, and legislators in all the systems, so far as obtainable."

Y.C.A.C. Quintet

M. Fachtmann, center, captain, high scorer on the team, who is dangerous near the basket. Will have the advantage over the Kobe center on the jumps. F. R. Harriss, Forward, utility man who feeds the other forwards. Fast, and usually comes through with a few long shots.

Down, forward, has not been playing much this season, but is the fighter on the team and should give Kobe plenty to worry about.

G. Fachtmann guard, plays a hard game and with his height is valuable on rebound shots.

H. Schoene, guard. This player has been showing some good basketball of late. Should prove hard to get past.

M. Zuber, guard, a bustling player, who usually gets his man.

H. Fachtmann, guard, who has been away all season but who should bolster the team considerably.

The ladies' match will likely be alow scoring contest as in previous interports, and the mens' game should be close all the way.

Mr. F. Honda, who referees in the All-Japan championship games, will be in charge of the game. The scorers are Mr. G. E. Beatty and Mr. M. L. Russell. The timers, are Mr. W. Helm, and a Kobe representative.

After the games, a mixed interport dinner will be held at the Club, followed by moving picture to which the Kobe players will be invited.

abroad.

"The economic situation of the port is steadily becoming stabilized. I hope our citizens will cooperate with the officials to help promote the further development of Yokohama. On this day, the anniversary of Yokohama's reconstruction, I want to say that I hope you continue with vigor the establishment of a better port city for the future, Mayor Onishi concluded.

After the mayor address, the national anthem was played. This was followed by three cheers for the good health of their Majesties by Governor Ishida of Kanagawa Prefecture. The meeting ended at 1.30 p.m.

Museum's Anniversary

In the evening, a lantern procession, in which all municipal officials and employees, men and women workers at the exposition participated paraded through the streets of Yokohama.

War Menaces Europe In Spite Of Peace Pacts

Nations Must Replace Arms Clause Or Continue Munitions Race

PARIS,—Behind the maze of phrases with which diplomats have hedged the European situation—talk of unilateral action, the thesis of security, the Western Pact, the Oriental Locarno, Equality in Arms for Germany—two grim alternatives, the vital crux of the entire position, present themselves.

Either Europe will finally conclude a general pact to replace the much-hated clauses of Article Five of the Versailles Treaty against which Germany rebels or the nations will plunge even more violently into the race for arms.

Great Britain, placed in a position of mediator because her immediate interests do not clash with either those of Germany or the French bloc, has endeavored to conciliate the Reich demands with the concessions the French are willing to concede.

The British offered an aerial pact, under which Germany, Britain, France and Italy would mutually guarantee one another against attack from the air.

Action would be automatic, that is to say without the delay of going to Geneva and discussing the procedure to be adopted before the League Council. Germany is willing to accept this air pact, or as it is called, the Air Locarno. So are the French, but the French insist it must be backed up with the Eastern Locarno, in which Russia will be brought into the pacts of Europe and become an additional guarantor of the land Locarno.

Herr Hitler says the limit he is willing to go is the conclusion of bilateral or two-sided pacts of mutual assistance and not enter into a mutual assistance bloc which, practically, would embrace every power in the old World.

As soon as agreement appears to emerge from the trouble horizon, some new difficulty, a stronger demand, is sprung by one or other of the nations and the diplomatic game starts all over again.

Meanwhile, the armies prepare and play war games in preparation for the day when they fear the powder barrel will burst.

Nations Prepare For War

France has increased her military service term to two years, Hitler plans an army of over 500,000 men, Italy has or shortly will have 600,000 men under the colors, Soviet Russia has no difficulty in summoning 900,000 men to action immediately, while with the Little Entente, Poland, Britain and half a dozen other nations Europe could put ten million men into the field in a minimum of time

In such a state of preparation and excitement, apprehensions increase over the "danger spots" of Europe.

Before the League plebiscite, it was the Saar, which has now become an integral part of Germany, which was expected to bring trouble to the year 1935.

If that did not develop, the military chiefs declared, then the Austrian situation, which had already nearly spread the flame of war across the Danubian plains, would ignite the smouldering passions of racial hatreds.

Austria remains a danger, but with Italy under arms ready to act if Austria's independence is menaced by the German Nazis the atmosphere has become temporarily cooler.

Two other danger spots which have been in the limelight are Dantzig and Memel, both cities with majority German populations which are cut off from the Fatherland. The former is a free city largely under Polish domination, while Memel is a statute town given over to Lithuania under guarantee from Britain, France, Italy and Japan.

Millions of Germans are living outside German territory.

Territorial Aims

Hitler's policy is to recover these "lost brothers," to bring them into the fold of the united Nazi State.

But, whereas the 800,000 Germans living in the Saar were brought under the Swastika emblem under the Treaty of Versailles, any attempt to recover the Germans living in other territories cut off from Germany clashes with the Treaties and threatens cutting up land belonging to other nations.

If the Germans seek to abolish the Polish corridor which cuts the Reich from East Prussia, Poland will suffer unless, as has been suggested, Warsaw could be given another outlet in the Baltic, which would mean an incursion into Lithuania.

Such action would arouse the whole of Europe. Every nation which received a slice of German territory under the peace agreement of 1919 would be in arms, or in a state of alarm.

This would arouse neighbors on all sides of Germany, from Denmark, which received Schleswig-Holstein, Belgium which added the territory of Eugen-Malmedy to the royal crown, France which received Alsace-Lorraine, Czecho-Slovakia which got a slice of Bohemia, while Italy, which added the Austrian southern Tyrol to her territory, and the Little Entente nations which shared with Rome in the dismemberment of the ramshackle Empire, Austro-Hungary.

Hands Off Or War

"Do not touch the peace treaties or there will be war!" cry the nations which benefitted from the peace settlement. They are strong enough and prepared to make war to defend their new empires.

"If exiled Germans, and there are millions of them, are not allowed to be freed from foreign yoke and return to the Fatherland there can 'never be tranquillity" answer the Germans.

To this the conciliatory powers, such as England and the Soviets, strive to find a compromise, with a promise of revision of some of the most glaring injustices of the treaties.

But parallel with this is what the French regard as the looming monster of German rearmament, officially announced by Hitler in defiance of the Versailles Treaty.

The Germans say they wish revision by peaceful means: the French bloc doubts Berlin's word and believes the growing army and air force aims at settlement by bloody means.

Disarmament has thus been buried in the tomes of statistics and speeches growing dusty in the League of Nations' cellars. Now the few remaining optimists amongst the diplomats are aiming at limitation, without which they see Armageddon once again bursting its bounds.

Paris Discredits Talk Of Reich Fortification

Rengo

PARIS, April 24—Strong doubt was expressed by Government officials here today regarding the press reports from Washington to the effect that Germany was fortifying the neutral zone in the Rhineland by transforming the local militia into a permanent army. They added that neither Paris nor London heard of the rumored fortifications.

It is believed that the Washington reports were based upon the story written on the subject by Mr. William Philip Simms, foreign news editor of the Scripp Howards press chain.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

Born 135 Years After His Grandfat her

A generation is ordinarily considered to be 30 years, but an interesting case of paternity is brought to light in the Addington family. Young Shemmel Baker Addington of Nickelsville, Virginia, is the third generation of his family in 135 years. He was born in 1912, his father was born in 1846 and his grandfather, Charles Crommel Addington was born in 1777.

Champion Sweet Corn Eater

In the corn belt of the United States they go in for a variety of contests—husking corn, tall corn growing contests, and sweet corn eating off the cob. At the Third Annual Sweet Corn Festival, Ortonville, Minnesota, August 24, 1932, Ed Kottwitz succeeded in consuming an unbelievable amount of corn—50 large ears at one sitting, thereby claiming the championship. The next annual festival will be in August 1935, and all sweet corneaters are invited to compete.

Overeating Held 'Greatest Fault'

Average Man Of 50 Has Had 50 Tons Of 'Alleged' Food, Dr. R. P. Baker

In a life span of fifty years the average person puts more than fifty tons of "alleged" food into his body, Dr. Ralph P. Baker of the Pennsylvania Board of Osteopathic Examiners declared recently. He spoke to 600 osteopaths at the opening of the annual convention of the Eastern Osteopathic Association, at the Hotel Pennsylvania, in New York City, according to the New York Times.

"Our greatest fault is overeating," Dr. Baker said. "The body will utilize only the amount of good needed for growth, tissue replacement and energy. All excess is waste, and waste matter is toxin. Food intoxication and alcoholic intoxication are similar in many respects. From a moral point of view they are identical. Each has its origin in perverted appetites.

Food Intoxicant

"The food intoxicant gets a headache if he misses a meal; the alcoholic needs his eye-opener. Some of us go to jail; some of the others go to the hospital."

Dr. Baker said he was convinced that owners of thoroughbred cattle and dogs fed them more scientifically than they fed themselves or their families.

Dr. Marion A. Dick, head of the physical therapy department of the Philadelphia Osteopathic Hospital, said that "our efforts in physical theraphy should be directed toward the removal of the cause rather than suppression of the symptoms."

Attempt to Remove Cause

"If you believed the disease was an effort of the body to eliminate waste and toxins and that it was the body which should be healed and not the disease," he added, "you would attempt to remove the cause by correcting the organism that was devitalizing the system and also by correcting the diet.

"Most patients believe they have little or no responsibility for the diseases which afflict them, and in fact they rather enjoy the attitude of the injured party. After they have been the rounds of many physicians and have given up all hope of ever regaining their health, then most of them are in a mood to listen. Then teach them how to live according to nature's laws."

Service On NMR Being Improved

Harbin Stores Crowded As Soviet Workers Receive Retirement Allowances

Commencing with this week, three trains per week will be run from the Manchurian frontier to Moscow, leaving Harbin on Saturdays, Sundays and Wednesdays at 8:30 a.m., says a Harbin dispatch dated April 11 appeasing in the North China Daily News.

The article continues: The trains from Hsinking to Harbin have been so crowded that many passengers and sacks of mail were left at the former station for later trains and in consequence of this, the management of the railway have now placed three passenger trains daily on this route. One of these is a night train, this giving passengers from the south the possibility of travelling through without a stop at Harbin, as the night train reaches Harbin more than an hour before the westbound train leaves. Though this is a great convenience to travellers, it is not at all appreciated by the Harbin hotel proprietors who are afraid that the bulk of the passengers will travel through, not staying a day in Harbin as formerly. The Siberian express of last Sunday was eight hours late in arriving at Manchuli, but as there is now a daily train from the frontier to Harbin, they did not suffer the inconvenience of having to wait two to three days at the cold frontier town for the next train. Siberian trains are all well fitted up and are exceedingly comfortable for travelling. The West bound trains are practically booked up for the next two weeks, as there are many foreigners going to Europe and hundreds of Soviet officials leaving the country.

Electric Car Blaze

Considerable excitement was caused last night by a sudden glare of white light in one of the main streets close to the Hokuman Hotel. The fire brigades and the public rushed to the spot and there found that the motor of a tramcar had fused and that the car itself was a blaze of electricity. Most fortunately the driver had had the presence of mind to put the brakes on, thus giving the passengers the opportunity of jumping off, not one being hurt. As water could not be used, the fire brigades returned home, but the brilliant light lasted for half an hour until all contact with the electric power station had been cut off. In consequence of the accident, the tram service was considerably interfered with, cars running only as far as the station beyond the burning car.

Shops Doing Well

The amount of money being paid out to the Soviet railway servants is giving all large stores in the city a regular harvest, such large ones as Tschurin's being packed from morning till night with a crowd of buyers, and these purchasers are not of the ordinary kind as they are making purchases of dear articles such as sewing machines, typewriters, photographic cameras, victrolas, etc., all of which they are taking with them to Russia, as no duty is to be charged on the personal effects of the railway servants returning to their native land. The firm of Tschurin's have further attracted the public by giving gifts to every purchaser of five kuobi worth of goods, these gifts including sewing machines valued at $200. Even the small shops are benefitting by the amount of free money as the laboring classes of the Soviet ralway staff patronize the small Chinese dealer hoping to buy from him cheaper than from the large stores. The prices at the great stores of Tschurin's are now, however, so low that other firms marvel how they are able to sell at the price.

Preparing For Summer

The Yacht Club authorities are once more preparing for the coming summer, arrangements having already been made to open a new and fine bathing place on the opposite bank of the river, which will also have a large and comfortable verandah as a restaurant. Special motor cutters will run across from the main Yacht Club every few minutes to the bathing place, giving the public a rapid service.

addition of Negroes' names to the jury rolls after the first trial.

"While there was testimony which cast doubt upon the qualifications of some of the Negroes who had been named, and there was also general testimony as to the lack of "sound judgment' of the 'good Negroes' in Jackson County," the Chief Justice said, "we think that the definite testimony as to the actual qualifications of individual Negroes, which was not met by any testimony equally direct, showed that there were Negroes in Jackson County qualified for jury service."

Holds Discrimination Shown

"We think that the evidence that for a general or longer no Negro had been called for service on any jury in Jackson County; that there were Negroes qualified for jury service; that according to the practice of the jury commission their names would normally appear on the preliminary list of male citizens of the requisite age, but that no names of Negroes were placed on the jury roll, and the testimony with respect to the lack of appropriate consideration of the qualifications of Negroes established the discrimination which the Constitution forbids," the opinion added.

Chief Justice Hughes condemned the "sweeping characterization of the qualification" of Negroes in Alabama as stated by the authorities of Morgan County.

"Upon the proof contained in the record now before us, a conclusion that their continuous and total exclusion from juries was because there were none possessing the requisite qualifications cannot be sustained," he declared.

In the case of Norris the court specifically ordered that he must be tried again, but in the Patterson case the issue was sent back to the Alabama courts for "further proceedings." Lawyers and court officials agreed that if a new trial should be refused to Patterson he could approach the Supreme Court for a direct order for a new trial.

In other Scottsboro reviews the court had set aside the convictions of seven of the nine Negroes accused of assaulting two white girls in a box car in 1931. The court then held that the defendants had not had full opportunity to consult counsel.

Norris and Patterson alone were tried the second time in Alabama. Two of the other Negroes were not brought to trial and the remaining five whose convictions were set aside still await trial.

Dickinson Puts New Deal Blame On Roosevelt

Senator Arraigns President Directly For Shortcomings Of Recovery Legislation

A direct attack upon President Roosevelt was made on April 6 at Roanoke, Va. by a Republican leader, Senator L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa, with a declaration that the "shortcomings of the New Deal recovery plans can no longer be charged to the 'brain trust,'" according to the New York Herald Tribune.

His dirict arraignment of the President, delivered in the Southern state that deserted the Democratic ranks to swing to Herbert Hoover in 1928, marked one of the few times that foes of the New Deal swung from attack upon that title to place responsibility for what they term its failure upon Mr. Roosevelt, says the article which follows:

Senator Dickinson has been mentioned as a prospective Republican candidate for President in 1936, and his address tonight was regarded as particularly significant. In view of known efforts by Republican campaign strategists to have Mr. Roosevelt personally bear the brunt of party attack.

Those in favor of such a course have argued that the President has lost some of his popularity, and that in any event if a campaign is to be effective it must be directed at President Roosevelt as the leader of the Democratic party.

Puts Blame on Roosevelt

Senator Dickinson tonight opened with an assertion that under Democratic administration "the sky is growing darker and no man knows what the weather will be tomorrow." Repeatedly he cited Roosevelt's campaign statements to support the contention they are far different from present Administration policies.

"Verily," Dickinson said, "Candidate Roosevelt is a total stranger to President Roosevelt."

The Senator told a Viriginia conference of Republicans that there was only one place to put the blame for Administration errors, "and that is on the doorstep of the White House."

"It can not be denied," he continued, "that every detail of our social and business position in this country is worse now than it was in the beginning of 1933."

Item by item, he took up "state rights," "public utilities, "control of business," "agriculture," and "campaign pledges" to emphasize his contention the President had repudiated his pre-election assurances to "turn back to paternalism, to bureaucratic control and to executive orders."

Duty of Republican Party Pointed Out

"The duty of the Republican party is apparent," he said. "The collapse that will follow the present course should be pointed out."

Mr. Dickinson quoted Franklin D. Roosevelt as saying in 1930 that "Washington must not be encouraged to interfere" in control of public utilities, insurance, business, agriculture or social welfare, then asked:

"What is taking place in the public utility field of the United States?"

Answering his own question, he said:

"In the first place, the Tennessee Valley Authority is entering into direct competition with every public utility company in that area."

Adding to that, he declared the "net effect" of the bill for control of public utility holding companies "will be to destroy the investments in the securities of those companies, amounting to billions of dollars."

Establishment of N. R. A. and "nullification of the anti-trust laws," he asserted, has brought "oppression of small enterprises and bureaucratic rule over business."

In bitter language, the speaker assailed the proposal of Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, for a national economic council with power to suggest economic laws for a direct vote of the people.

"What Secretary Wallace really means," Mr. Dickinson said, "is that constitutional safeguards should be abolished so far as they tend to hamper the experiments under the New Deal."

Summarizing, Mr. Dickinson declared: "The Democratic party is proposing to regulate everything through a bureau in Washington.

"When the spending spree is ended, when crystal gazing ceases to be attractive, when it is found that most panaceas are a myth, then the ideals of the Republican party, its constructive policies, its dependable leadership, will again be in favor."

U.S. Will Test Robot Seaplane Over Atlantic

Floyd Bennett Field May Be Selected As Base For Renewal Of Experiments

Plans are being completed, it was learned on April 6 at Washington, for test flights with "robot-controlled" seaplanes over the Atlantic, probably from Floyd Bennett Field, similar to those recently conducted on the Pacific Coast, to determine the feasibility of a trans-Atlantic transport service, according to the New York Herald Tribune.

The Atlantic tests, like those on the Pacific Coast, which were made in preparation for the approaching inauguration of a transoceanic service to the Far East, will be made to test further the value of the new radio directional apparatus under the supervision of Eugene Vidal, director of the Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce.

Washington Also Considered

The base of the Atlantic flights has not been definitely selected. In addition to Floyd Bennett Field, Washington is under consideration because most of the officials concerned are stationed here. Experts point out, however, that, since large seaplanes are used in these experimental flights, the hazards of a forced descent on land would be virtually eliminated by basing them at such a field as Floyd Bennett, which is close to the ocean.

The new apparatus, which is to be used by Pan American Airways, Inc., in its trans-Pacific service, is expected by experts to increase greatly the safety of air travel in view of the results of recent preliminary tests conducted from Oakland Airport over the Pacific Ocean. In these tests, under Mr. Vidal's direction, Captain Albert Hegenberger, ace instrument flyer of the Army Air Corps; Chester Snow, of the Department of Commerce, and Captain Clayton Bissell, of the Army, took part. Mr. Snow since has left the Bureau of Air Commerce and Captain Bissell has gone to his Army station in Hawaii. It is expected, however, that Captain Hegenberger will be loaned again by the Army for the new flights, and Mr. Vidal now is considering the selection of other personnel.

During the Pacific flights the successful operation of the new radio compass was hailed by Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce, and other officials as a most important contribution to air transport. The device permits flyers to navigate an airplane by tuning in any radio station of known location. A highly sensitive needle set in a compass then guides the airplane to the exact geographical location from which the radio signals or program are being broadcast.

In addition to the new compass, the seaplane to be used on the Atlantic flights will be equipped with an improved robot pilot which controls the actual mechanical details of flying the plane. Relieving the pilots of much of the strain of flying their craft, the arrangement is calculated to reduce the human element of danger by giving the flyers little more to do than to supervise and check the operation of the delicate mechanical pilot.

Will Fly Toward Bermuda

Although no schedule has been formulated as yet for the Atlantic flights it is understood they will be conducted over the ocean in the direction of Bermuda. This is on the path of a projected Southern air line route to Europe. No plane has been selected for the flights, but, if Washington should be selected as the base, it is believed Mr. Vidal would choose a regular land type equipped with emergency rafts for use in event of a forced landing at sea. This was the type used in the Pacific Coast tests last month. It carried sufficient fuel to cruise a little more than 3,000 miles. If Bennett Field is selected, however, it is possible that a flying boat will be used.

Preliminary experiments in high altitude flying of transport airplanes may be conducted in the coming tests.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Jumping Flea

The Ukulele, most popular Hawaiian instrument, was not invented in Hawaii but was introduced there by the Portuguese in 1877. The skipping movement of the player's fingers from one side of the instrument to the other, suggested its Hawaiian name. "Uku" is an insect in Hawaiian "lele" means "to bounce, to jump." Hence "ukulele" means literally a jumping insect or a flea.

The House of 60 Echoes

An echo of the strongest power characterizes the Palace of Simonetta, about 2 miles out of Milan, Italy. The house forms three sides of a quadrangle. The parallel walls cause the sound to reverberate back and forth till the sound waves are quite spent. On a foggy day the human voice will reverberate 56 times, before it is stilled. On a fair day the number of echoes reaches 60; the sound of a single musical instrument resembles a great orchestra playing in concert.

Gar Wood Sets Speed Record

Miss America X Fails To Beat Own Fresh Water Mark; To Try Again

N.Y. Herald Tribune

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., April 6.—Gar Wood, who has driven motor boats faster than any man in the world, set a salt-water record of 118.5802 m. p. h. with his Miss America X today, but failed to break his freshwater record of 124.86, set in the Detroit River at Algonac, Mich., in 1932.

"I am not disappointed," Wood said, as a launch hauled Miss America in from the creek. He had expected a world's record. Miss America had been supercharged from 4,400 to 7,400 horsepower since the Algonac record and more speed was expected here because salt water is buoyant.

Wood said he will install new propellers tomorrow and try again Monday.

The craft roared down Indian Creek on the southward run into the wind at 118.0704. Wood said the wind held him back. He wheeled and raced back against the outgoing tide at 119.090 miles an hour. A wind quartered the starboard on that run, he said, cutting the speed noticeably.

The motors performed to perfection, he said. He believes the craft will attain greater speeds Monday.

After the trials Wood took Marvin H. McIntyre, White House Secretary, for a 100-mile-an-hour ride on the creek.

"It was more of a thrill than my first plane ride," McIntyre said. "I'm glad he didn't try any records with me there."

Lady Betty Carstairs, English sports-woman, witnessed the record attempts as guest of Mrs. Wood.

Rockies In The Atlantic 'Would Eliminate Canal'

Senator Vandenberg of Michigan gives out the following information in Washington recently:

"I received a very interesting suggestion from a man who indicated it would make more work and accomplsh relief better if the administration would remove the Rocky mountains and dump the soil in the Atlantic Ocean, which would in, turn, raise the Atlantic to the level of the Pacific and do away with the necessity for the Panama Canal."

USSR Is Assured Of British Support

Moscow Seeking To Conclude Eastern Locarno Pact To Safeguard Peace

The conversations between Anthony Eden, British Lord Privy Seal, and Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet Foreign Commissar, in Moscow ended on March 30 in an atmosphere of undisguised optimism, especially on the side of the Russians, says Harold Denny in a dispatch to the New York Times.

The article dated March 30, continues:

While officials are extremely reticent and emphasized that the conversations were purely exploratory, it was asserted also that they had an important practical result. This result, there is good reason to believe tonight, is that the Soviet Government now feels certain of Britain's benevolent attitude toward the Eastern Locarno project, on which the Russians have pinned their hopes of safeguarding peace along their western border.

Soviet leaders are now convinced that they can proceed with the formation of a regional group of States to ward off German aggression, with at least the tacit support of Britain and certainly the assurance that Britain will not interfere—of which a week ago they were anxiously uncertain.

To Be Open to Germany

This regional pact will include guarantees of mutual assurance, including assistance against aggression by any non-member nation. It will remain open for Germany to join if she likes. Of course, no formal engagements concerning the Eastern Locarno will be entered into by the Soviet Union and Britain, and none is needed.

Chancellor Hitler's uncompromising attitude and hostility to Soviet Russia, which he displayed in the Berlin conversations with Mr. Eden and Sir John Simon, British Foreign Secretary, and his negative answers on the topics of the London communique of Feb. 3, as compared with the Soviet Government's readiness to engage in any action likely to keep peace, are credited with promoting materially the friendly tone of Mr. Eden's conversations here with Soviet leaders.

It can be assumed that the Soviet leaders have placed in detail before Mr. Eden their fears of what Germany may be planning and their reasons for believing Britain would ultimately be endangered. These are, briefly, that Germany is still determined on Anschluss with Austria, means to get Memel and wishes control of the Ukraine, which has the rich Don Basin with its iron, coal and other treasures and where the Soviet Government has built up a great industrial center.

Cite Added Threats

All Austria dominated by Germany, the Russians argue, would be a fatal threat to Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia and would bring on a conflict with France and Italy and sharpen the differences between Hungary and Rumania. Poland, of course, as the Russians see it, would be drawn into the war drama.

If Herr Hitler were successful in the East, according to this same argument, he would then have bases of raw materials and could start a second round in the west with the lively hope of smiting Britain and winning back Germany's former colonies.

Mr. Eden will return to England with a first-hand understanding of the reality of the Soviet leaders' concern, and they now have a much clearer picture of British foreign policy, which, like the Soviet Union's, is directed toward peace.

Another reason for Soviet optimism tonight over Mr. Eden's visit is a belief that the cordiality of the Eden-Litvinoff conversations will have a good psychological effect in the Far East.

Today's conversations carried further the topics already brought up. The talks took place at M. Litvinoff's country place, a large house that once belonged to a rich Moscow merchant, at the village of Mashkava, thirty miles from Moscow.

The conversation followed a luncheon, given by M. and Mme. Litvinoff, which was attended by Mr. Eden, Ivan M. Maisky, Soviet Ambassador to London; Viscount Chilston, British Ambassador to Moscow, and Lady Chilston; William Strange, British Foreign Office adviser; Nicolai Krestinsky, Assistant Soviet Foreign Commissar, and the two Litvinoff children.

At the table butter was served in the form of rosettes and around the base of each in Russian was printed M. Litvinff's dictum, "Peace is indivisible," on which principle the British are in agreement.

Tonight Mr. Eden and M. Litvinoff spoke together again informally at a reception given by Lord Chilston to M. Litvinoff and the chiefs of embassies and legations in Moscow.

Mr. Eden and M. Litvinoff will issue a joint communique tomorrow. Mr. Eden will spend most of the morning sightseeing. He will depart at 2:45 P. M. for Warsaw.

U. S. Cooperation Sought

Soviet Russia's officially inspired press bespoke United States cooperation in helping keep Europe's peace on March 30 as Anglo-Russian security discussions ended with results termed "practical" and "highly satisfactory" by both sides, says, The New York Times.

Most outspoken in asking American cooperation in preserving peace was the government's organ for heavy industry, Za Industrializatsiu, whose authoritative writer on foreign affairs, Michael Tanin, said under the caption, "The United States at the Crossroads";

"At the moment of an extremely tense atmosphere in Europe in connection with the aggressive attitude of German Nazis, American diplomacy is manifesting indecision."

Declaring America's position in international affairs worsened by recent Far Eastern events, which, he said, the American press has described as "closely connected with the breaking of the Versailles Treaty by Germany," Mr. Tanin's article asserted the United States "can never isolate itself from Europe."

Could Not Avoid War

America, the writer continued, "could not avoid becoming involved in war in Europe," saying the leading capitalist circles in America at least "realize that war can be postponed only through the accord of United States policy with that of other parties interested in protection of the European status quo."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

His Own Worst Enemy

When the 18-year old Franz Josef became Emperor of Austria on December 2, 1848, he came into a curious status. He was not only Emperor of Austria but also King of Hungary, King of Croatia, King of Bohemia and individual ruler of many other provinces constituting his Empire. Hungary in the name of its King was in rebellion against Austria and its Emperor. Croatia in the name of its King made war upon Hungary and its King, in which war the Emperor of Austria declared himself at first a neutral. Thus it came about that Franz Josef, King of Croatia, was in a state of war with Franz Josef, King of Hungary, while Franz Josef, Emperor of Austria declared himself neutral. It was a true Mark Twain situation which ended when triple Franz Josef called upon the Russian Czar to help him defeat Hungary.

Homing Pants

Walter F. Stanley of Charlotte, N. C. saw service in France in the 119th Infantry of the 30th Division during the World War, and only a few days before the Armistice he was gassed and sent to a hospital in Rouen, France. Here he was deprived of his service uniform, given the regulation blue denim hospital attire, and thereafter was transferred to a hospital in England, remaining there until June, 1919. Stanley then returned to his home in Charlotte and took up his work again. Asked to participate in the Armistice parade of 1919, Stanley hastened to the Army store for a service uniform and the first pair of pants he picked up had his own name and serial number on the inside seam. The pants he lost in the French hospital had come back to their owner.

ART EXHIBITION

The third annual exhibition of the Japan Catholic Art Society opened today at the Tokyo-Do Book store Art Galleries, Jinbocho, Kanda and will continue through Sunday.

Members of the relatively new society, all Japanese Catholics, are said to be creating a new religious art form quite different from the traditional Japanese Buddhist art. The exhibition is divided into two groups, that of Japanese water colors and that of western style paintings. While many of the painters are amateurs, there are in the society a number of leading painters, including Mr. Luka Hasagawa, Mr. Keiji Kimura, Mr. Isashige Sato, and Mr. Keiji Kondo.

Among the most interesting pictures at the exhibit is the one reproduced here. It represents the persecution of Japanese Catholics during the Tokugawa period and is the work of Mr. Seiyo Yoshimatsu. Another painting by Mr. Keiji Kondo in which Chinese ink is used on a silk sheet, has attracted much attention. In addition there are several religious paintings in Japanese style.

The society, one of the most active in art groups, is headed by Archbishop A. Canbon and the counsellor is the Rev. Hermann Heuvers.

At 7 p.m. today, Mr. J. Roy McKenlay producer and stage manager of Miss Crothers' comedy, will put the cast through its final dress rehearsal. According to Mr. McKenlay the long awaited New York and London success should win much praise here. Mrs. Alexander George, who has had prior experience as a leading lady in Rose Marie and the Desert Song, two New York hits, plays the leading role of Mary Howard. In this part Mrs. George is providing herself perhaps the one person in the foreign community who could fit into the difficult role of the novelist and still keep about her acting a naturalness and earnest charm. Red Army Warns Of Reich Military

Soviet Official Says German Force Will Be 40 Per Cent Larger Than French Soon

Germany now has as large an army as the Kaiser had before the World War and by this Summer will have one practically as large as the Soviet Union's and 40 per cent larger than France's, according to estimates of the Red Army staff.

These estimates were revealed on March 31 by Michael Tukhachevsky, Vice-Commissar of Defense, in an analysis of the German military strength occupying a full page in the newspaper Pravda, says a Moscow despatch to the New York Times. He said the German armed forces this Summer would number 900,000, or 840,000 if the 60,000 students in the civil aviation schools were deducted. The Red Army, as M. Tukhachevsky announced two months ago, now numbers 940,000.

German industry was put to work rearming Germany when Chancellor Hitler took power and Germany can be expected to complete her military preparations by 1936, according to M. Tukhachevsky. He estimates that in a year or two Germany can put an army in the field equal in size to the German Army at the end of the World War.

The strategy of the German general staff, according to the Red Army staff, is to prepare for lightning mobilization and strike hard and swiftly to carry the war immediately into the enemy's territory. This would be accomplished with the aid of the air force which would interfere with the enemy's mobilization while the ground forces would be hurried into enemy territory by motorized equipment.

M. Tukhachevsky expresses the opinion that the size of the divisions in Germany's present thirty-six-division force would be increased to 15,000 men each to make a strong invading army and that in each division besides the infantry would be two artillery regiments, a tank battalion, signal corps, engineers' battalion and a chemical company.

In case of war, he says, Germany would immediately raise 108 infantry divisions. Besides the artillery in the infantry and cavalry units the Red Army believes the Reichswehr also will have at least twelve artillery divisions, twelve divisions of anti-aircraft artillery, twelve divisions of coast defense artillery and twelve tank battalions. Five cavalry divisions, it is believed, will be included in the German plans.

Besides the actual army, says M. Tukhachevsky, Germany has 900,000 armed trained men who can quickly be adapted for field duty. He lists these as 400,000 storm troopers, 40,000 defense divisions, 300,000 labor units, 50,00 border guards and 110,000 policemen.

Tukhachevsky says Germany now has 3,700 airplanes capable of use, including 2,100 bombers and reconnoissance planes, and could send in 1,500 planes with an invading army. He estimates Germany will build 4,500 planes this year. He lists the air force as 8,000 officers and 52,000 men. He says 60,000 more are being trained in civil and sports aviation.

Metropolitan Opera Stars Clown At Benefit Show

No. 6 from a business man; each thought, for independent reasons, that the "Ring" should be shortened. What resulted was "Nibelungen Ringling Bros.-Barnum, Bailey & Goetterdaemmerung." There were four circus rings on the stage and ever one on it—a mob of sixteen singers—was fighting against time. They did the "Ring" in two minutes flat.

No. 7, a hardened Broadwayite, demanded a vaudeville turn in advance of a heavy thing like "Tristan und Isolde." He got it. It developed into "Allez-Oop," or "Fun in a Gymnasium," with those two well-matched acrobats—Pons and Melchior—both in pink skin tights. Blond wigs adorned their heads, with demure green ribbons tied in piquant bows.

Picture it, if you can! Miss Pons, weighing about 100 pounds, and Mr. Melchior—well, a good deal more than 200. He tossed her about as if she were a straw in the wind. He carried her on a pole, on his chest, on his neck, on his head. Such grace, such abandon!

And then Miss Pons showed her stuff, with almost no effort she gripped Mr. Melchior at the ankles, lifted and poised him at arm's length. It knocked the audience cold.

Mr. Knight slyly gave the secret away. "They had a telephone call," he explained to the frantic crowd, "and they are still on the wire." And since the secret was out, it might have been added that it took a week of rehearsing before the stage crew was satisfied that it had cables stout enough to hold up Mr. Melchior.

The next turn was "Music Without Words," a waltz done by Gladys Swarthout and Edward Johnson, new assistant manager of the Metropolitan and, between ourselves, once a tenor. This seemed to be the management's own idea; no complaint.

The Moocher Is Glorified

The next charge made public was that the opera paid no attention to fundamentals, this from a school teacher. So the opera gave them "Woodman, Spare That Trio," wherein Lily Pons, Helen Jepson and Gladys Swarthout sang "Minnie the Moocher," accompanied by Chick Webb's Orchestra on the stage, music arranged by William Daly and staged by Frank Chapman. It was the same number that had stopped the show at the Post-Depression Varieties some Sabbaths ago.

A crotchety note followed requesting some humor for "Carmen." The Met went out and got Beatrice Lillie and put her in "Bee's in Our Bonnet." With Paul Althouse, Louis D'Angelo and the chorus, she did a scene from the first act of the saga of the cigarette girl of Seville. What Miss Lille did with the gal was a caution. She used cockney English, bad French and gestures. She bit somebody's ankle. She sang somebody's—no one knew whose—music. She made love; oh, how she made love!

She made out a good case for the complainant and for Miss Lillie. There were even whispers that they were going to put her and Carmen into a movie short.

Complaint No. 10 was from a fellow who implored, "Let the public know just how the critics write those reviews." It was done in a sketch written by Leonard Liebling, one of the fraternity. "The Cub-Critic's Dream," was the title. John Hayden and Harold Woolf directed and a group from the Lambs Club played it: Len D. Hollister, Ralph Locke, John Cherry, Al Ochs, Walter Armin, Bruce B. Evans, John Dunbar and Don Tombins.

The names of the town's critics were thinly disguised and their foibles brought out into the open. Sad was it, indeed, to learn that critics write without hearing, that they are jaundiced, that they know not always whereof they speak, that some care only for Wagner and others for prize fights.

Exit the "Man on the Street"

Complaint No. 11 was from the Man on the Street demanding a hearing for the Man on the Street. Marek Windheim, directing himself and his own sketch, was the M. on the S. in a turn called, "Louder, Please." He tried to make an audition. No one paid any attention to him. Behind him they were setting the stage for the last scene. Somebody barked orders and Windheim thought they were for him. Mr. Knight continued blandly with his comment. They finally ended the the musi director, and there were special arrangements by Mr. Armbruster, Paul Sterrett and Mr. Pelletier. Mr. Knight and Deems Taylor contributed lyrics. Earle R. Lewis was the chairman of the program committee. For the rest, every one in the company who was still in town contributed appearances and services for the formal first half of the program as well as the unpredictable second.

It is just and proper that Metropolitan should go on. If presenting the operas of Wagner and Mozart and Verdi were not good enough reason, this annual shindig could become its excuse for being. As one cynic remarked, "The least opera can be—and the most—is funny."

agony and carted off the Man on the Street.

No. 12 was from the expert who thought-opera could be made to pay by turning it into a spectacle like college football. For this scene there were bleachers on one side of the stage and a miniature proscenium on the other. There were cheer leaders from Columbia and a cheering section from the same halls of learning. A triple cast of "Pagliacci" took the field. Mr. Knight gave a play-by-play account of the proceedings, and Thomas Chalmers blew a mean referee's whistle.

It all seemed a little mad—except where they got to the place where everybody gets killed off. Then some one yelled, "La comedia e finita." And the evening ended as has already been recounted.

De Valera Splits With Extremists

Vigorous Drive Begun Against Irish Republican Army; Parades To Be Banned

The breach between Eamon de Valera's government and the revolutionary Irish Republican Army is now complete. Before Easter Week the government is expected to issue a ban upon all parades by extremist military organizations which have been using the tramway strike as an occasion for their demonstrations, according to the New York Times.

The dispatch from Dublin, dated March 31 continues:

Meantime a vigorous drive is being directed against Irish Republican Army leaders. The police carried out several raids recently on the haunts of Maurice Twomey, the organization's chief of staff, and Sean MacBride, adjutant general, but both have evaded arrest so far. It is believed the chief of staff succeeded in getting away to England.

Today Rory Brugha, son of the late Cathal Brugha, a revolutionary leader shot during the civil war, was arrested while posting Irish Republican Army bills in Dublin. Rody Connolly, son of James Connolly, executed following the Easter Week uprising in 1916, was also arrested and removed to Curragh military camp at Kildare, where all the prisoners are detained pending their appearance before military tribunal.

In his recent ultimatum to irregular forces, Mr. de Valera said:

"We have been very patient during the last three years. We put up with things no other government in the world would tolerate, hoping common sense would assert itself. Our hope apparently has been misplaced. The use of violence against the forces of the government and individual citizens has continued. This must stop."

This attitude of the government has aroused the extremists' ire and they now denounce Mr. de Valera as "worse than Cosgrave" (William Cosgrave, former President).

Speaking at a meeting in Dublin today, Mrs. MacBride, mother of Sean MacBride, said Mr. de Valera's latest statement showed him as an irresponsible weak tyrant. "The Coercion Act destroyed Cosgrave, and it will destroy de Valera," she added.

Last night a large force of police carried out an extensive round-up along the Longford Letitrim border in the course of which many extremists were arrested.

The official Irish Republican army newspaper, The Republic, was suppressed, and military guards on all government buildings were strengthened.

A NEW NOVEL

"Pilot And Shogun"

The Strange Story Of Will Adams (Miura Anjin), A Contemporary Of Shakespeare, Who Won The Confidence Of Tokugawa Iyeyasu

By JAMES A. B. SCHERER
Author of "Japan's Advance", "The Romance of Japan", etc.

The Ship in Which Will Adams reached Japan in 1600

'Dr. Scherer's presentation of "Miura Anjin" as a Japanese samurai is thrilling, and his portraiture of that bygone time has the ring of truth. His romance is real history, and I find it far superior to any historical novel of recent years. For he knows the Old Japan at first hand, and has absorbed its atmosphere. He is as much at home on the straw-mats of Nihon as in the Mermaid Tavern: and he transports his reader with him.'—Dr. Thomas Baty in The Japan Times.

ART EXHIBITION

Mr. Noboru Foujioka, well-known Japanese painter who has spent 24 years in America and Europe, is holding the third exhibition since his return to Japan at the Seijusha Art Galleries, Ginza. The exhibition, which opened Wednesday, will continue to May 7.

The 43 oil paintings of Mr. Foujioka are representative of the work he has done since his return to Japan. Slightly cynical, generously humorous, they reflect his impressions of Japan on his return after a long absence.

The one pictured here is entitled, "Japanese Ready Made." Others include:

"Scene at a Theater," "Interior," "Japanese Girl Student Up-to-date," "Evening," "Chess Games," "Dancer," "Back of Ginza," "On the Kamakura Beach," "Morning," "Iron," "Shimbashi," and "Happy Life."

Many of Mr. Foujioka's paintings are satires of present day Japanese life and as they are by a Japanese who studied not only in his country but also in America, and more recently, in France, and combination of influences shown in his work is of a very unusual character.

Mr. Tsuguharu Foujita, internationally famous Japanese artist, said in introducing his friend Mr. Foujioka upon his return recently from America. "In him we find no barriers of nationality or race! he traveled like a gypsy between Europe and America in quest of subjects for his art. He is not afraid of critics or how his work appeals to his public. He himself is the product of art."

Artistically, Mr. Foujioka is a cosmopolitan of a peculiar mixture of American, French and Japanese education. He is a modernist, but is sparing in his use of color in extremes, preferring blacks, grays and the more sober tones, without thereby becoming an apostle of gloom.

His general attitude is that of the satirist plus much of American humor seasoned with French piquancy. In spite of his painful experience with hunger in his youthful days, his outlook on life is that of an interested and sympathetic spectator rather than an embittered one.

Mr. Foujioka has a strong admiration for John Sloan, American painter and etcher, from whom he largely derived not only his technique but in part his attitude towards the subjects that he chooses to depict.

The canvases in the present one-man exhibition are mainly his paintings since his arrival in this country about a year ago, including several outdoor scenes which were conspicuous by their absence in his previous exhibits.

Instead of "She" and "Lonely Doll" which attracted much attention from art critics in his previous exhibits, Mr. Foujioka's presentation this time includes "Chorus Girl" and "Happy Life."

The exhibition will be open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. daily.

"She Loves me Not" with Bing Crosby and Miriam Hopkins

Adopted from the widely-read novel which appeared in serial form in the Saturday Evening Post, and also from the Broadway play of the same name, "She Loves me Not," a Paramount picture, opens at the Hibiya Gekijo this week.

The principals are brought together when Miss Hopkins as Curly Flagg, the unwilling witness to a Philadelphia gang shooting, sneaks into the dormitory room of Paul Lawton, played by Crosby, and asks his protection. With their heads and hearts full of chivalrous intentions, he and a group of his classmates disguise her as a boy and hide her in the dormitory.

In time the affair comes to the attention of J. Thorval Jones, motion picture magnate and father of one of the students, and he and his demon publicity man, Gus McNeal, cook up a fantastic publicity scheme with Curly as its central figure, designed to save a picture that is dying on their hands.

Simultaneous with McNeal's arrival on the campus, comes an avenging gunman from Philadelphia to silence Curly, who might prove a formidable state witness. Into this strange set-up walks the Dean of the University, who is bound, gagged and forced to pose with Curly for newsphotos.

The whole insanely ludicrous affair is spread over the newspapers of the country, the boys are threatened with expulsion, Lawton's fiancee breaks her engagement, congressmen hurry to the defense of the students and, when the uproar subsides, Curly is in the movies, Lawton is engaged to the dean's daughter, and affairs at Nassau Hall have been restored to their usual leisurely tempo.

Assisting Crosby and Miss Hopkins in the supporting roles are as distinguished and as expert a cast as any recent Hollywood production has featured. Kitty Carlisle, who made her film debut in "Murder at the Vanities," is beautiful to look at and sings well. Henry Stephenson is amusing as the startled dean, Lynne Overman plays the shrewd, hard-shelled, wise-cracking publicity agent, and Judith Allen, Warren Hymer, George Barbier and Vince Barnett are excellent in small roles.

"Desirable" with Jean Muir and George Brent

"Desirable," Warner Brothers colorful drama of Broadway's theatrical life and its contact with New York's social set, with an all star cast headed by Jean Muir, George Brent, Berree Teasdale and John Halliday, is on this week's program at Hibiya Gekijo.

The picture, based on the story by the famous magazine writer, Mary McCall, Jr., is filled with highly dramatic and intensely emotional situations, with rapier-like dialogue and a climactic clash between a woman of the world and her unsophisticated daughter that fairly takes the breath.

For the first time Miss Muir appears in a role that calls for gorgeous gowns and luxurious settings as well as a strong portrayal of emotional upsets. Verree Teasdale, one of Hollywood's best dressed actresses, also will be seen in costumes that are the forerunners of the coming styles of the most noted of fashionable designers.

Miss Muir plays the part of a sincere and unspoiled girl who has been hidden away in a finishing school by her mother, a reigning beauty of the Broadway stage, who selfishly fears the loss of her own popularity if it should become known that she has a grown daughter.

Verree Teasdale has the role of the self-centered domineering mother who, after reluctantly admitting to the girl's existence, tries to marry her off to the scion of a snobbish family of blue bloods whom the girl does not love.

Wallace Asks US Cut High Tariffs To Raise Exports

Urges Middle Course Raising Import Total By Half Billion Dollars

Stimulation of American export trade by reduction of tariff is urged by Secretary Wallace as the key to the doors of prosperity.

If other nations are to buy American-produced goods, he argued in a radio address, they must be able to pay for them and must be enabled to meet the bill by shipping their own products to the United States, says the Christian Science Monitor.

Gold Payments Not Answer

He asserted that in the last year "the deficiency of imports has been made up with gold," adding:

"Few countries can part with much more without undermining the bases of their currencies. Not only are we faced, therefore, with the possibility of a continuation of exports at the present low level, but we are in real and immediate danger of a still further recession unless steps are taken to make possible greater imports from abroad.

"Nevertheless, the simple fact that if we are to have any exports we must have imports, gets only lip service throughout the country. Minority groups, among whom tariff-protected groups are plentiful, clamor as of old for special favors enabling them to grab a larger share of the national income.

"Of 177 bills or resolutions involving foreign trade introduced into Congress up to the first of March, only five seemed designed to increase imports while 56 were designed to restrict them further."

U. S. Must Buy More Abroad

If the country "refuses to import goods, he added, "it ought at least to be prepared to face the consequences." Mr. Wallace continued:

"In agriculture alone, as I have repeatedly pointed out, we would have to make the retirement of from 40,000,000 to 100,000,000 acres of crop land.

"We would be faced with the necessity of a regimentation of our economic life and of our activities in general, compared with which such measures as the Agricultural Adjustment Act would seem quite insignificant.

"The pain of adjustment would be less, I think, if we took a planned middle course, one which might perhaps call for imports of an additional $500,000,000 worth of goods annually, and for the permanent withdrawal of either 25,000,000 acres of good farm land or an equivalent amount of poor farm land.

"In order to follow such a course we shall have to reduce our tariff."

Maine Governor Urges Quota On Japanese Goods

American Market Must Be Preserved For US Textiles, Declares Brann

Nippon Dempo-United Press

WASHINGTON, April 29.—Half a dozen Government agencies today concentrated attention on the plight of the nation's cotton textile industry.

Heading a delegation of 50 Congressmen and industrial representatives from his state, Governor Louis J. Brann, of Maine, urged the textile industry survey committee of Cabinet members set up by President Roosevelt to create immediately a quota restricting cotton textile imports from Japan and also to abolish the processing tax.

"Every cotton mill in Maine is operating at a loss," he asserted. "The idle looms have increased by 38 per cent compared with last year. Our textile industry is in a critical and distressing plight."

Discussing the threat to the American cotton textile mills from Japanese competition, Governor Brann said:

"This is an economic contest between different standards of civilization. In the interest of maintenance of harmonious relationship between the United States and Japan, this question should be settled before it becomes more irritating. We have a right to assume that the gains in the importation of textiles from Japan will constantly increase and that unless curtailed immediately they will menace the entire domestic industry.

U.S. for U.S. Goods

"The American market must be preserved for the American textile industry if it is to survive. Japanese importations have increased astoundingly in value in the last four months. In March, more textiles were imported from Japan than in the entire year of 1934. Taking the imports of bleached cotton from March as the basis of computation, Japan equalled more than 25 per cent of the entire American production in 1934."

In connection with the processing tax, the Governor of Maine declared;

"We do not take the position that the distribution of benefits to farmers under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration should cease or that the program should be disturbed, but we submit that another source of raising the fund be found. The processing tax itself should be eliminated or greatly reduced. We feel that it could be eliminated and collected from other sources while the textile industry is in its present deplorable conditions. We suggest that funds in lieu of the processing tax come from the general relief funds."

He also asked the committee to work out a fair basis of wage differential between the Northern and Southern cotton textile mills.

Attack On Tax

Mr. Chester Davis, head of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, speaking to executives of the American Trade Association, who are here for the convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce, charged that the attacks on the cotton processing tax are "the bunk"

"The fact is that the tax applies to imports as well as to the domestic production," he said. "It does not change the competitive situation one iota."

At the White House, meanwhile, Governor Wilbur L. Cross, of Connecticut, and Governor Theodore F. Green, of Rhode Island, conferred with President Roosevelt. They discussed the work relif program and the cotton textile situation.

The House ways and means committee rejected a request for a subcommittee to make an investigation of cotton textile tariffs and also tabled a resolution by Representative Allen Towner Treadway, Massachusetts Republican, asking the State Department to submit voluminous data on trade agreements. In connection with the latter, the committee received a letter from Secretary of State Cordell Hull asking that no action be taken.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"—by Ripley

The Brain Tax

The Faculty Tax, a sort of inverted income tax, was in regular use in colonial New England for many years prior to the Revolution. It was really a tax on business ability, based on the expected earning powers of the taxpayer.

The Hubbard Tavern of Hatfield, Mass., established by Elisha Hubbard in 1760, was a very famous hostelry in those days. After Elisha's death, his widow Lucy continued to run the Tavern and so great was her business ability, that the city tax levied on her mental faculty for a single year was 30 pounds (about $150.00 at par) in 1772. In order to arrive at the comparative purchasing value of this amount, it is necessary to multiply it by 5, equalling $750 of our present day money.

The Honey House

In 1911 a swarm of bees came to the Chaney homestead in Kay County, near Tonkawa, Okla., and began storing their sweets in an upstairs window casing. They worked and stayed, and within a short time a succession of swarms joined them, until as many as 20 different swarms have been found working in various parts of the house. Honey drips from the ceiling on to the dining table and from tiny cracks in the walls. 600 pounds of honey have been taken from between two joists of the ceiling at one time, and local bee keepers say there is at least 6 tons of pure honey within walls of the house. And, Believe It or Not, not a single tenant of the house has ever been stung!

Prize April Fool Joke Was Played In 1860

Though April fool pranksters do their worst today, they are unlikely to attain the shining pinnacle of success attained by an unknown funster back in 1860, says the Christian Science Monitor.

The chronicles say that on that April Fool's Day, thousands of persons flocked to the Tower of London to see the "annual ceremony of washing the white lions." They were lured by invitations bearing a large seal which looked official—but was not.

Some April fool experts consider that the topnotch foolery since the custom began.

Social and Personal Notes

The scene above is from the delightful garden party given by the Polish Minister and Madame Moscicka Friday afternoon at the Polish Legation.

The beautiful gardens of the Polish Legation were admired by a distinguished group which included high officials of the Japanese government, members of the diplomatic circle and prominent members of the foreign community.

The gardens, which are unanimously considered the most attractive of any legation or embassy in Tokyo, were built more than 30 years ago by Captain F. Brinkley, founder of The Japan Times and Mail. Great banks of flowering azalea bushes, the bright green of newly leafed trees against the darker foliage and the pines, the delicately leafed red Japanese maples, the pond and the rolling lawns—these combined to make the garden a lovely color setting for the party. As the guests strolled along the big stone slabbed walks, they found the first violets of spring.

Under a canopy and overlooking the pond and the azalea bushes, the guests enjoyed refreshments at any tables. In another section of the garden, they vied in porcelain painting.

The Polish Minister and Madame Moscicka were assisted by members of the legation who moved among the various groups with cordial hospitality.

RIKKYO CELEBRATING FOUNDER'S DAY

St. Paul's university in Ikebukuro is commemorating its 61st Founder's Day with a university holiday today and a Founder's Day service in the University Chapel Sunday at 10 a.m. Friday at 1 p.m. the annual Matriculation Service was held for 250 freshmen who were admitted into the first year of the Junior College on April 16, beginning the 61st year of Rikkyo. Saturday at the Takaratei restaurant in Kojimachi, Dr. Shigeharu Kimura, Director of the university will preside over the annual faculty dinner.

Several of the local Alumni clubs of the university are holding dinner meetings in various parts of the nation over the weekend. The Osaka Alumni Club of St. Paul's University will hold the largest gathering of any of the several clubs on Monday evening. Taking advantage of the General Synod meetings of the Nippon Seikokwai beginning next Tuesday morning in Sendai, the Sendai Alumni Club of the university will hold a dinner in that city on Monday evening. Dr. Kimura, University Director will be the chief speaker and Dr. Saimontaro Nakamura of Tohoku Imperial University's Seismological Department will preside. At the service Sunday morning in the University chapel the long list of founders and former presidents and directors of St. Paul's will be remembered in the Prayers of the Holy Communion.

St. Paul's University had its beginnings in 1874 when the late Bishop Channing Moore Williams purchased the residence of one early foreign resident named Longfellow at No. 70 in the old foreign settlement of Tsukiji and opened a school for boys with three teachers and five students. The Rev. C. T. Blanchet was placed in charge as the first principal. In 1875 the school was moved to Irifune-cho, Kyobashi-ku but unfortunately the school was destroyed within a few months after its removal by the great fire of 1875 which swept over Nihonbashi and Kyobashi wards. During the Satsuma troubles the school was disbanded but by the end of 1877 it was reopened in another house at Gochome, Shinsakae-cho, Kyobashi under the direction of the late Rev. J. H. Quinby. Due to a rapid growth in the student body necessitating larger quarters for day and boarding students a new site was purchased in the Tsukiji settlement and the new buildings erected on land where the present new St. Luke's International Medical Center stands. Upon the completion of the new buildings in 1883, the late Dr. J. M. Gardiner became head of the school. At this stage in the history of course or instruction was remodeled after that of a collegiate school in America and the appelation was altered to St. Paul's College. The late Mr. T. Saotome became Registrar of the College in 1890. The Rev. T. S. Tyng, succeeded Dr. Gardiner as head.

In 1894 the college buildings were destroyed by earthquake and the school carried on in makeshift sections in the old Parish House of the former Trinity Cathedral in Tsukiji. In 1896 the main sections of new College buildings and dormitories were constructed and the College reorganized and brought into conformity with the Government regulations. In 1897 Mr. Tyng was succeeded by the Rev. Arthur Lloyd and government license was granted to the middle school department. In 1901 the late Rt. Rev. J. S. Motoda, D.D. became head of the middle school department. In 1904 the Rt. Rev. H. St. G. Tucker, D.D., now Bishop of Virginia became President of the Paul's College. The period was then ripe for the development of private universities and in 1906 a new College Hall was erected and in April, 1907 Rikkyo Daigaku was opened under government regulations with the Rt. Rev. John McKim, D.D., the present senior Bishop of the Anglican Communion in Japan as its Founder and with the late Bishop Motoda as its Director. To provide for the expanding plans for the development of the present University the present Ikebukuro Campus was purchased. In 1912 the Rt. Rev. C. S. Reifsnider, D.D., succeeded Bishop Tucker as President of Rikkyo Gakuin and under his guidance during the past 23 years St. Paul's has enjoyed a steady growth in the Japanese educational system. In 1922, the University received full government license as a private university, and after sixty-four years of strenuous work and improvement the little experiments in English schools started by Bishop Williams received the highest recognition in Japan.

Edict Stresses Ties With Japan

Nippon's Glorious History Is Example For New State, Declares Emperor

Rengo

HSINKING, May 2—An earnest desire that the entire nation, both official and non-official, will fully realize the closest and indivisible relationship existing between Manchoukuo and Japan and exert their utmost to strengthen the friendly ties binding the two nations, thereby contributing to the maintenance of the world peace and the enhancement of the welfare of mankind, was expressed by His Majesty the Emperor of Manchoukuo in an Imperial Edict issued today.

The Imperial message which is addressed to the whole populace of the Empire on the occasion of the successful completion of the Emperor's recent visit to Japan was read by the Emperor at a gathering of the Cabinet ministers, high Government officials, provincial governors and leading officers of the Manchoukuo Army and Navy who had been summoned by the sovereign to the Imperial Palace this morning for the special occasion. The ceremony commenced at 11:30 a.m. with the arrival of the Emperor at the Hall where the ceremony was to be held. The ruler was accompanied by Minister of the Imperial Household Shen Juei-lin and General Chang Hai-peng, Chief Aide-de-camp to His Majesty.

Visit To Japan

Stating that the recent visit to the Japanese Empire had been His Majesty's long-cherished desire and that he was highly pleased at the materialization of his desire, the Imperial message says that the Emperor was very happy over the warm and cordial reception accorded him by the entire Japanese population as well as by the Imperial Family during his visit.

The Emperor is fully aware, the message goes on to state, that the assistance rendered by the Japanese nation has served most usefully to strengthen the state's national foundation and to effect remarkable developments in the Empire's national life.

Upon personally inspecting conditions prevailing in various circles in the country, the Emperor has come to fully understand how Japan's administration is based upon the ruler's benevolence and love of his people, and how the nation's moral foundation is placed on the people's devotion to their Emperor and the sense of filial piety, the Imperial Edict states.

Performing Duty

Thus, continues the message, the Manchoukuo sovereign has realized the reasons why Japan enjoys her 3,000 years' brilliant history, of peaceful domestic administration and no aggression by foreign Powers, and thus she is performing perfectly her duty in developing and enhancing Oriental culture.

These observations by the Emperor will never fail to enable him to effect remarkable improvements in every line of Manchoukuo's administration, following the example of the Japanese Empire, with the hearty cooperation of all his subjects. Thus, the Emperor sincerely hopes that he will be able to formulate Manchoukuo's permanent national policy, agreeable to every subject in the whole Empire, the Imperial Edict concludes.

National Celebration

At the close of the ceremony, the Emperor handed the Imperial message to Premier Cheng Hsiao-hsu. It is expected that the Imperial rescript will be conveyed to the local population on May 15 when nationwide celebrations will take place in commemoration of the Emperor's successful conclusion of his visit of Japan.

Following the ceremony, all the officials and officers present at the function were entertained at a luncheon party given in their honor by Premier Cheng at the Yamato Hotel at noon today. In the speech delivered before the gathering, the Premier lengthily dwelled upon the purport of the Imperial rescript.

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

The Hand of Death

An old stone pillar stands on the sidewalk of Broad Street in Augusta, Georgia which city officials have hesitated to remove due to a curious legend connected with it. The tradition is that about 50 years ago an itinerant preacher foretold the destruction of the Market Place, of which the pillar was then a part, by a cyclone or fire. The prophecy came true. Now there is a mark of a hand on the pillar which the preacher said was left by a slave sold into bondage. He foretold that anyone attempting to move the pillar would meet with death. There is a rumor that the curse has struck down four people who have disregarded the preacher's warning. Successive city administrations have decided to leave the pillar alone and many offers to remove it have not been accepted.

The Microscopic Will

Many strange, curious and unbelievable wills find their way to probate courts, but none is more odd than a will engraved on the back of a sailor's navy identification disc in microscopic writing. The case is cited in Sol. J. 638 (1922) and Costigan's "Cases on Property," P. 127.

MISS G. WELLINGTON ADDRESSES PENWOMEN

Miss Gertrude Wellington, whose book reviews are well known to readers of The Japan Times and Mail, reviewed Hans Fallada's latest book, "Who Once Eats Out of the Tin Bowl" or "The World Outside" and discussed the author's place in literature at the May meeting of the Tokyo branch of the National League of American Penwomen Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs. J. F. Gressitt 820 Shimouma, Setagaya-ku.

The author of Little Man, What Now?" has written a new book which will probably be one of the most widely-read books of the year in England and America, Miss Wellington said. The new book is the story of the failure of a discharged convict to make good after five years in prison for forgery and also of the failure of the people in "the outside world" to act in a humane way towards one of their fellow men.

In her discussion, Miss Wellington said:

"Hans Fallada has a compassionate interest in the 'little' and 'insignificant' people caught up in the world social and economic systems of today; in the 'individual' moved by forces outside of himself; in the struggle to retain the integrity of 'personality' despite the relentlessness of the masses 'outside' that a person is a part of, or against. In this book he has pictured realistically those outside who are horrified that a fist should be pushed into the face of a young girl, but who calmly ignore the pressure of social customs that crush in deadlier fashion the very spirit out of a man.

"The men in this book, as in the former "Little Man, What Now?" ask only to earn their way in honesty and friendliness. If in the first story Fallada reveals the cruelty of an economic system that brings tragic experiences into the lives of the unemployed, in this one he has shown as clearly that the greatest fault lies not in systems but in the closer and more intimate problem of how not to destroy the fellows "outside" of ourselves with whom we come in contact.

"With this as his great theme, the simplicity of his story-telling is remarkable. There is humor as well as tragedy in the book. There are quick strokes of satire that the author holds extremely well in hand, thus creating a sense of non-partisanship and detachment. He manages to keep objectively within the bounds his created characters and situations demand.

"Fallada's sympathy is broad and real and he is sincere. Such a book as Main Street seems narrow and superficial compared to this. Perhaps Dreiser has come closer to Fallada in his truths of character and life. The German author has been likened to Jacob Wasserman for his humane interest in the question of "justice" and for his ability to penetrate and depict "psychologically" men who are "outside himself" in the world about him—in our world. Fallada has been likened, as well, to Dickens because of his compassion and his knowledge of the humorous with the tragic experiences that make up the life of a person. He has certainly shown himself as intelligently detached and as capable of satire as Sinclair Lewis.

"But Hans Fallada is really a greater man than his books appear on the surface. He is broader than the moral principles that lie in the two books mentioned. He is more clever as a realistic writer than the general reader is led to suspect. Because he is so clever his books are able to reach tremendous sales—his first made into a moving-picture: because he understands humanity he has pictured subjects of wide attraction; because he is an artist he doesn't need to resort to sensationalism as is proved in the late novel; because he is of fine character himself he has written stories that appeal to and draw out "the better side" of all those who read them.

"But with all this, there is still that the world has ever known, consequently to other writers who have come near to that one who may not have written quite so gently as our contemporary, but who certainly wrote as sincerely and as realistically of the world about him. Fallada really approximates Dostoefsky, for, with the Russian, he is actually concerned in writing as a philosophical realist of his time. It has been said that "all essential art is symbolical; it is a bridge built between two worlds; a sign that expresses a deep, authentic reality; the end of art surpasses experimental reality and is to express hidden reality, not in a direct way but by means of projected shadows." With Dostoefsky, Hans Fallada and his art are completely immersed in the profound realities of the world about him, and for both of these men the "ultimate realities are not the external forms of men, but their inner depths, the destiny of the human spirit" as it is evident in every phase of contemporary social life."

Senate Rejects Borah Motion On Relief Bill

lions of unemployed, attracted a gang of harpies to Washington whose necks should be corded. They have been here waylaying the people's representatives seeking special favors.

"Mr. President, if you depend on codes or the NRA to protect this money, not only will your faces be red when you are called to account for it here, but your countenance will be scarlet."

Senator Wagner interrupted, as he had done when Senators Borah and Glass were speaking, to ask that the NRA be treated on its own merits at a more proper time. He said that the Finance Committee soon would complete its study of the act and its administration, and that then the Senate could act on the proposal more intelligently.

He protested that the labor provisions of codes might be uprooted by the adoption of the Borah amendment. In reply to this, Senator Black suggested a change, which was accepted by Senator Borah, providing that nothing in the proposal would be considered as prohibiting agreements to raise wages, reduce hours and abolish child labor.

Senator Lewis said that the American Bar Association had "ordered" the anti-trust laws suspended and the Senate had acted accordingly.

Harrison's Plea Prevails

Senator Harrison took the floor to plead for orderly procedure. He argued that the Senate would be acting precipitately and with poor judgment if it jumped at this first opportunity to vent itself against the NRA.

"This proposal is brought out at this time in order to spring a trap," he said. "Adoption of this amendment would mean the death knell of further legislation relative to the NRA.

"You will have a chance in a very few days to vote on this proposition. The Finance Committee is proceeding with its investigation and I can assure you that there will be opportunity for the Senate to legislate relative to the NRA."

TOKYO WOMEN'S CLUB

About 60 members of the Tokyo Women's Club visited the Settlement for the Boat People on the Sumida river and the Tsukishima school for the boat children Monday afternoon.

The visits and the trip up the Sumida river was arranged by Miss Lila Halsey, chairman of the civics committee who is also a member of the board of directors of the settlement. Mr. Hideo Suzuki, secretary of the settlement, received the group at his home which is a dormitory for about 20 small children of the boat people. In the dormitory, the children live as members of Mr. Suzuki's family and are sent to neighboring schools. Their fathers pay ¥8 a month, which does not cover the cost of their meager but healthy and clean living. The balance is taken from the small funds of the settlement which is mainly supported by the Christian people in Tokyo.

Although this was the first time many of the club members had seen the settlement, it was not their first contact with it. Last Christmas, the club bought blue serge dresses for the little girls of the settlement and warm overcoats for the boys. After the group saw the small living spaces on the boats—mere pits between decks and no more than 6 feet square and 4 feet high,—they were informed that one boat family had a few-days old baby. The women took up a collection for the infant which amounted to ¥25 and this was given to Mr. Suzuki. He was instructed to use ¥5 for the child and ¥20 for the settlement.

Before the club members started on the boat trip, a printed summary of the work of the settlement and the life of the boat people was given each member by Miss Halsey. The story told in this summary follows:

On the rivers and canals of Tokyo are about 20,000 people living on canal boats, who are earning a meager living and are more or less irregular in their city registrations. Probably there are twice as many boats as the statistics show. Only 800 of the 6845 boats are owned by the people who propel them. Usually boatmen work for transportation companies, carryng any kind of merchandise back and forth to business houses, at an average of Yen 42 per month; the smallest wage being ¥30 and the largest ¥50. Accordingly most of these people cannot afford to rent homes on land, as it cost a small family ¥39 per month to live, so they make their homes on the boats, and are usually able to tie up at some wharf during the night. This class numbers 6356 men, 4736 women, 9000 children.

The living space on a boat consists of a room between decks about 6 feet square and 4 feet high. There is often a shelter on deck near this room where the family cooking can be done in the open.

At night the parents and children sleep in this tiny room, and it is reported that the air is sometimes so bad that babies are stifled to death. Boatmen are so obsessed by the peril to their lives on the water that they are rather spendthrift in their living. When a couple do have children, they have large families, so they apprentice the boys out at ten or eleven years of age and very often sell their girls to geisha houses, as soon as possible.

The roving life of boatmen makes the 6 year Primary education of their children nearly impossible. One boy wrote his experience in his school essay, in this way.

"I am the son of a boatman who carries cargoes of lumber to Fukagawa. Every day I go to school from our boat, but often I do not know where our boat will be when I return. In the morning when I go to school I expect to find our boat waiting by the dock of the lumber yard after school is over. But today when I returned from school our boat was not there. So I asked the manager of the Lumber yard about our boat, but no one could tell me where it was. I started to search for our boat and wandered from place to place until dark. About eight o'clock my legs ached so much that I could not walk any more, and also I was very hungry. Then I put my school cape over my head and lay down in the shelter of a lumber pile where I slept until morning and was roused from my sleep by a policeman."

Some parents arrange to leave their children with relatives on land. On the city records there are 3000 children of school age, but not all are in school. Boatmen have great difficulty, too, caring for the health of the family. No dates can be made with doctors or visiting nurses because of the uncertainty of their whereabouts. Another sad experience of their lives is the accidental capsizing of their boats by which cargo, homes and sometimes loved ones are lost. Tokyo police record 50 such accidents in one year.

A Boatmen's Union exists which helps to the amount of ¥3 any member whose boat is turned over. The late Viscount Eiichi Shibusawa left a fund in his will to be used for unfortune boatmen, according to the American plan; that is, after an officer of the fund investigates a case he gives a charge card on a doctor, hospital or food-supply store to the applicant and so meets his need. There are 35 such officers in Tokyo each having charge of a certain part of the waterways, but with very limited means at their disposal.

In March, this year the Asahi Shimbun assumed the responsibility for a Medical-boat which visits weekly the different sections of the canals and gives aid to any patients asking for help.

Two organizations are assisting in the education of the children in a limited way. The Suijo Kyokai, a society of well-to-do citizens, organized in 1930. They have a boarding school from Monday to Saturday noon in Tsukishima, where about 65 children are in attendance. The cost per child is about ¥21 per month, of which the parents pay ¥7 and the society the balance. This school is well equipped and prospering.

The Sumidagawa Settlement for boatmen opened in 1929 with no supporting body back of it; only a devoted worker and funds gathered from friends interested from time to time. The plan there is to accommodate about 20 children in Mr. Suzuki's home, where they are regarded as his family and sent to the neighboring schools. The fathers of these children pay Y. 8 per month so they live very meagerly, but they are healthy and do well in school.

During the past 6 years, altogether 58 children have lived in Mr. Hideo Suzuki's family. 5 have graduated from Primary school. 17 are living in the Settlement now. Of the other 36, after staying a year or two, 21 have returned with their parents to the village they came from and are continuing their education. 9 are living on hand and so they can attend school. The other 6 had to give up school and return to help their parents.

Gradually this Settlement is making friends among boatmen by celebrating Christmas and Doll's Days with them; by visiting their sick and assisting the boatmen of the capsized boats; by providing pure water from a hydrant on the dock and by selling them second hand clothing in season at a nominal price and by selling them cheap rice every day.

Ceylon Considers Murder Not News; Crime High

want of a means of livelihood or poverty."

Army of Youths

Another disturbing fact is that 1,800 youths, between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one, were sent to prison last year as compared with 1,412 the year before. It is to prevent this class from relapsing and from being reinforced by the child criminal that a Borstal system and a proper probation system has been advocated for years. This is certainly needed.

Mr. Justice Akbar, a prominent figure in the Association, spoke about "miserable children" who appeared in court "with no sort of education or moral ideas," and gave his opinion that there must be compulsory education before there can be any improvement. He wants to "attack the problem at the very root."

It is here that the recommendation to try out a Poor Relief system seems to meet a real need. For the relationship between poverty and crime has been well shown recently by Dr. P. S. Haikerwal, of Lucknow University.

Conditions in Ceylon are very different from those in Europe, and Mr. Wedderburn points out that it is very doubtful if any existing system of poor relief can be applied in Ceylon, unless it is so elastic as to allow of experimentation and frequent amendment. So far as towns are concerned, it will be necessary to deal differently with the smaller towns, larger towns, and Colombo, the smaller towns having neither the revenue nor staff to enable them to organize relief.

Equal Treatment, Hull's Tariff Aim

Action Against Discriminating Nations Not Retaliation, Says State Department

Secretary Hull's intention to withhold trade benefits from nations discriminating against the United States strongly implements and reenforces the unconditional most-favored-nation principle, the State Department declared recently at Washington, according to the New York Times in a clarifying statement.

The statement was prompted by apparent misunderstandings in this country of the policy enunciated recently by Secretary Hull of not extending the benefits of unconditional most-favored-nation reciprocal trade agreements to those countries which continued to discriminate against us.

It was not prompted by adverse criticisms from abroad, but was intended to demonstrate that the policy should lead to the elimination of discriminations and thereby to a general application of the unconditional most-favored-nation principle.

The policy was "the opposite of retaliation," the State Department asserted; one of "respectful and friendly approach to all countries to join us in establishing equality of trade treatment throughout the world."

Particularly was it desired to eliminate various types of quantitative restrictions, such as import quotas and the allocation of exchange.

"In the case of these newer forms of control," the statement read, "this government requires only that foreign countries shall accord our nationals fair and equitable treatment; that quota allocation shall give us such a fair share of the trade as may be indicated by a representative period prior to the institution of the control; and that the exchange allotted to this country shall similarly represent our fair share of the total provided as nearly as may be judged by a previous representative period."

In his announcement, Mr. Hull said that, as Canada, The Netherlands, Switzerland and Spain were negotiating for reciprocal agreements, the unconditional most-favored-nation benefits in treaties already concluded would be extended to them, but that if the negotiations yielded no substantial results within six months, then we would be free to withdraw the benefits from them

If discriminations being practiced against the United States by Germany, Denmark, Italy and Portugal were not stopped, he added, we might at any time give thirty days' notice of the termination of our commercial agreements with them. Moreover, he said, if conversations now under way with France did not lead within a few days to negotiations for a reciprocal agreement, similar action would be taken.

These denunciations would mean that the benefits of unconditional most-favored-nation agreements with other countries would not be extended to the discriminating nations.

DEPARTMENT STATEMENT

The State Department statement today read as follows:

THE UNCONDITIONAL MOST-FAVORED-NATION PRINCIPLE

It appears that in various quarters certain misconceptions have arisen concerning the policy of this government as expressed in the press release of April 1 regarding the generalization of the tariff concessions made in the Belgian agreement. It has been inferred by some that the statements contained in that press release indicate a departure from the unconditional most-favored-nation principle. Nothing could be further removed from fact.

The Trade Agreements Act of June 12, 1934, provides that the duties proclaimed in consequence of the trade agreements entered into with foreign countries shall be extended to all countries, but provides that they may be confined to such countries as do not discriminate against American commerce or pursue policies which tend to defeat the purposes of the act. This provision is wholly in accord with the unconditional most-favored-nation principle, the very essence of which is non-discriminatory treatment in commercial relations.

This country stands ready to extend unconditionally the concessions granted in our trade agreements to all other countries which give this country non-discriminatory treatment. Naturally, no nation which favors and practices a policy of trade discrimination—a policy diametrically opposed to the most-favored-nation principle—would expect, or be disposed to accept, the benefits of the most-favored-nation treatment.

The "Opposite of Retaliation"

This policy is the opposite of retaliation. It is a policy of respectful and friendly approach to all countries to join us in establishing equality of trade treatment throughout the world. This policy implements the unconditional most-favored-nation principle, which is the most effective means of bringing about more rapidly a general reduction of trade barriers, of giving elasticity to trade arrangements and of expanding foreign trade.

The reciprocal trade agreements program recently inaugurated by this government places us in a position where we have something positive to offer other countries in return for most-favored-nation treatment. In point of fact, most of the nations of the world have and do accord us unconditional most-favored-nation treatment on customs duties. Whenever these countries make trade agreements with other countries, we get the benefit of the lower rates. This is the usual rule.

If, however, a country, as in some instances is the case, refuses to give us the benefits of the rates which it grants to other countries, such a country cannot expect to enjoy the benefits of the concessions which we make in our trade agreements. The unconditional most-favored-nation principle requires only that we grant the lower rates emerging from our trade agreements to those countries which extend us non-discriminatory treatment.

More recently, however, new forms of trade discrimination have arisen. Reference is made to the various types of quantitative restrictions, such as import quotas and the allocation of exchange.

New Forms More Widespread

While tariff discriminations against American commerce are, in the case of most countries, relatively unimportant, these new forms of discrimination are far more widespread throughout the world at the present moment. In the case of these newer forms of control this government requires only that foreign countries shall accord our nationals fair and equitable treatment; that quota allocation shall give us such a fair share of the trade as may be indicated by a representative period prior to the institution of the control; and that the exchange allotted to this country shall similarly represent our fair share of the total provided as nearly as may be judged by a previous representative period.

Some countries with which we now have most-favored-nation agreements do in fact substantially discriminate against American commerce. The discriminatory practices of these countries do not justify us in continuing to extend to them the benefits of unconditional most-favored-nation treatment.

Swanee River

Stephen C. Foster was born July 4, 1826 at Pittsburgh, when he composed "Swanee River" he had neither seen nor heard of the river of this name. He tried several other river names called from a geographical index, and finally decided on Swansee for its euphony.

As a young man he had set out to become the best Ethiopian (jargon of minstrel song writers) song writer in the world, an ambition which he fulfilled most admirably. His "Swanee River," "Old Black Joe" and "Old Folks at Home" immortalized his name as a deathless composer of American songs.

Foster spent the last four years of his life in New York City. With the exception of a few years at college and a sojourn in Cincinnatti, the rest of his life was spent at Pittsburgh without seeing the southern scenes which his songs made famous.

Atta Turk

On November 25, 1934, the Grand National Assembly of Turkey voted a special law to bestow the family name and title of "Atta Turk" upon Ghazi Mustapha Kemal, the President of Turkey. "Atta" which means "Chief" or "First" in Turkish is also a slangy American exclamation of admiration.

Scots Achieve Home Rule Gain In Local Office

Branch Of Scottish Bureau Expected To Develop Important Powers

A crumb of the home-rule cake so often demanded for Scotland has materialized by the opening in Edinburgh of a branch of the Scottish Office, hitherto located entirely in London, according to the Christian Science Monitor.

The Scottish Office is the headquarters of the administration that was transferred to London three centuries ago when James VI of Scotland added England and Ireland to the lands which acknowledged him as their king.

Devolution has now succeeded overlordship as a dominant motive in the British Empire. The ceremony which has just taken place in Edinburgh reminds the United Kingdom of this fact.

Rule Nearer Home

Sir Godfrey Collins, Secretary of State for Scotland, formally opened the branch. He said he hoped the new office would be a complete working unit and not simply a liaison post with London. The duties of the new office would consist, he said, mainly of matters affecting local government, and there should be less call to spend the taxpayers' money in deputations to London if hopes were fulfilled as to its usefulness.

The Secretary of State also referred to the "very proper desire in Scotland to bring Scottish administration nearer home."

"It is essential," he said, "at all times to keep in closest touch with Scottish mind and sentiment. . . . Public opinion on important questions often develops quickly and it is vital for the administration to react promptly to the thought of the nation."

Finance Questions

The present system under which Scotland is governed imposes a heavy responsibility on the Scottish Secretary in London. Any devolution of business is a step in the right direction, though the National Party inclines to the view that the change effected will be comparatively unimportant so long as the Treasury has the final say in the spending of public money.

New buildings on the Calton Hill are likely to be begun this year, following plans by a Scottish architect. At present the various departments are scattered over the city, in many cases under conditions which would call forth the disapproval of Royal Inspectors on any private employer.

Leader Of Youth In Reich Denies Paganism Drift should learn the Old Testament or not."

The interviewer interrupted: "Do you personally deem it desirable that youth shall learn the Old Testament also and shall treasure it as a part of the revealed word of God?"

Objects to Part

"If my private opinion is of interest to you in this connection, then let me say that my attitude toward the Old Testament coincides with Goethe's as laid down in his 'Dichtung und Wahrheit' (Fancy and Truth)," said Herr von Schirach.

"I am frank to say, however, that as leader of the youth I have some misgivings concerning certain portions of the Old Testament—portions in which unchaste and immoral things are told in a way that might prove dangerous to the youthful mind.

"In the Third Reich, with its sharp line of demarcation drawn between the realms of competence belonging to the church and those belonging to the state, it follows as a matter of course that the responsibility for religious education lies with the leaders of both Christian confessions. Let them decide what religious reading matter is desirable for youth and what not. It isn't my business to take over problems that belong to the church.

"I should like to take this occasion emphatically to deny the stupid allegation that I want to introduce some form of 'Wotan cult.' Just as truly as the churches have for centuries seen Germanic history distortedly it also is true that no sensible person in Germany is thinking of returning to sacrificial offerings of horses, to long, flowing beards, and to hides for clothing as some naive people abroad seem to imagine."

J.P. Morgan Sells Famous Painting

Disposes Of 'Madonna And Child With Angels' To English Collector

Another painting has been sold by J. P. Morgan and four others from his collection are in the market, it was learned in New York City on March 29.

An English collector, whose name was not divulged, has purchased the "Madonna and Child With Angels," by Fra Angelico. One of the three other pictures now being offered to collectors is "The Epiphany," by Bartolommeo Vivarini.

It was also learned that another famous painting had left this country, according to the New York Times. It is Botticelli's "Portrait of Guilliano de' Medici," bought by Baron H. Thyssen of Tessino, Switzerland, from the Mogmar Art Foundation, a corporation of the family of the late Otto H. Kahn.

Once in Bologna Collection

This painting formerly was in the collection of Conte Procolo Isolani at Bologna. It portrays the younger son of Piero di Cosimo de Medici, practically in profile. It is believed to have been painted a short time before his death in 1478, at the time that Botticelli was at work on his famous painting "Spring."

When asked regarding a report of the sale, Charles R. Henschel, president of Mr. Knoedler & Co., the firm which is representing Mr. Morgan in the sales, said that the Fra Angelico work had been sold to an English collector and that four other paintings were for sale. However, he firmly denied reports that the entire Morgan collection would be disposed of.

Mr. Morgan's collection of jewelry, tapestries, sculpture and art objects is not in the market, Mr. Henschel said; only certain things are for sale and the financier has declined to part with some paintings which other collectors were ready to buy. No comment was made at the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co.

Rumors of Sale Current

Ever since announcement was made early this year that Mr. Morgan had sold six of his famous paintings for $1,500,000, rumors have been current up and down Fifty-seventh Street, New York City the heart of America's art world, about further sales by the financier. Color was lent to reports that the entire collection would be broken up by the announcement a short time ago that Mr. Morgan's entire collection of miniatures would be offered at auction in London in June.

The price paid for the Fra Angelico painting was not disclosed. At one time this picture was in the collection of King George IV of England and was presented by him to Leopold I of Belgium, from whom it descended to Leopold II. It was sold in Paris in 1909.

Venturi, the Italian art critic, has expressed the opinion that the painting dates from Fra Angelico's youthful period and probably was painted not later than the altarpiece of the Linaiuoli.

Picture Once Exhibited Here

In 1917 the picture was included in an exhibition of Italian paintings at the Kleinberger Galleries here. In the catalogue of that show, compiled by Osvald Siren and Maurice W. Brockwell, this comment was made:

"It is remarkable that this Madonna is practically unknown to students. Yet it is one of the most canonical renderings of the traditional motive by this master, the foremost of the painters of the Madonna. We feel the spirit of the pious monk Fra Giovanni; it is a hieratic hymn to the Virgin, though rendered with rather less poetry than devotional reverence. It is one of the least intimately human compositions by Fra Angelico, but masterful in design and unsurpassed in technique."

Arts In Industry Are Glorified In New York Show

Exhibit, Opened By Signal By President, Reveals Beauty Of Products

By pressing a gold telegraph key in the Oval Room of the White House on April 15 at 8:30 p.m., President Roosevelt started an electric impulse that set off 120 flash bulbs in the Forum of Rockefeller Center, New York City, turned on fifty floodlights, started a siren, dropped an American flag, and turned on the electric organ. Thereby he officially opened the Industrial Arts Exposition under the auspices of the National Alliance of Art and Industry.

After this display it was hardly necessary for Mayor La Guardia to notify the throng that the exposition had been opened, says the New York Times. In a brief address, which was broadcast, Mr. La Guardia sought to prevent any misunderstanding of the exposition by pointing out that "industrial art" did not mean "portraits and sculpture," out "useful art in every walk of life, whether it is the shop, the home or the office."

Sees Science Flourishing

"Here are the latest models in improvement showing that science and art are flourishing while finance is flagging," he said. "As long as science and art progress, I am sure that the country will be able to survive the mistakes and blunders of our finance."

The exposition would not permit an address by James A. Moffett, Federal Housing Administrator, to come from Washington by ordinary radio, but had it relayed to Rockefeller Center over a beam of light. Mr. Moffett hailed the exposition for its emphasis on construction of houses and home improvement.

"The home is the focal point in the exposition," he said. "The spiritual value of the home is the bulwark of our civilization," adding that "national consciousness for improvement of the home is comparatively recent."

Pointing out that bright homes were prime factors in the promotion of human happiness and in the prevention of crime, Mr. Moffett praised the Federal Housing Act as "a contribution to our cultural background."

Frank Lloyd Wright, noted architect, said "a tragic breakdown stares us in the face. American leadership was too ignorant or is too blird to be entrusted with the might we got by way of machine success. Now, an architect, at least, should see life as a structure, taking outward forms from interior conditions. In official America, there is yet no such organic form. We live in economic as well as esthetic and partially moral chaos."

Just before the exposition was opened, a group of designers issued a statement attacking the show and disclosing that they had refused to join it.

"The National Alliance of Art and Industry was organized a few years ago with the avowed intention of promoting good design in manufactured products," their statement said. "A number of designers, the undersigned among them, cooperated in the hope of encouraging the Alliance's avowed intention.

"However, after observing over a period of years its deviations from its original aims, we have come to the conclusion that it does not promote the best standards of American design, and we have declined invitations to participate in the current exhibition at Rockefeller Center.

"We believe that the Alliance neither stimulates better design, represents the artist, nor improves the relationship between the designer and industry."

Those who signed the statement were: Egmont Arens, Donald Deskey, Henry Dreyfus, Norman Bel Geddes, Lurelle Guild, Raymond Yoewy, Gilbert Rohde, George Sakier, Walter Dorwin Teague, Walter von Nessen and Russel Wright.

Design's Aid to Sales Stressed

The value of art in industry, as represented in the exhibition, was emphasized by Clinton L. Bardo, president of the National Association of Manufacturers.

"As a stimulus to the purchasing desire of the public in these days of depression, it is proving a powerful ally in industry's struggle for recovery," he said. "Then sales curve has not responded to the old forms of pressure—pep meetings have petered out.

"Manufacturers are turning to design as an element of sales appeal. The industrial designer is staging a comeback. Appearance has become a potent sale factor."

In arranging the exposition, the National Alliance of Art and Industry have emphasized beauty of design in objects of mass production intended for the average consumer. The show includes a wide variety of such objects, varying from kitchen sinks to automobiles.

German Synod Sends Appeal To Chancellor

Protestants Seek To Avert State Control Of Church, Announced By Frick

Persecution of the Protestant clergy in Germany since Chancellor Adolf Hitler came into power appears to be approaching a third and decisive phase, says a despatch to the New York Times from Berlin on April 14.

After a meeting on April 10, leaders of the stubbornly independent opposition, the United Confessional Synod movement, informed their associates they had no further hope of avoiding an open conflict with government police or of preserving the present form of the established Lutheran church in Germany. They are understood to have made a last desperate appeal in a telegram to Chancellor Hitler asking him to halt at the last moment the plans of his Minister of the Interior, Dr. Wilhelm Frick.

Twice within the past month, Dr. Frick had announced that the State must take control of the Protestant church and "exercise its authority."

The article continues:

The government now has no choice except to confess its policy of dealing with the Protestant church is fundamentally false or to place the church in the hands of the police and finance and administer it directly. All other means of realizing its policy of subordinating the church to the needs of the party and the State have been exhausted.

Loses Authority

Reich Bishop Ludwig Mueller, chosen by Chancellor Hitler to be the "authorization leader" of German Protestantism, has lost all authority and his central church administration has ceased to function because the instructions it issues are simply ignored by both lay and clerical functionaries of regional churches, which continue to exist as virtually independent bodies.

The only active central church administrative body is that set up by the opposition clergy headed by Bishop August Marahrens. It is not, however, recognized by the State.

In preparation for steps evidently to be taken in the near future, State Secretary Otto Stuckart has been transferred from the Ministry of Culture, which is making plans for putting German Protestantism in its "proper and subordinate place in the Third Reich," to the Ministry of the Interior, which controls police forces and enforces such regulations.

Herr Stuckart was an intimate associate of the former Protestant civil administrator, Dr. August Jaeger, and is regarded as the author of many of the most extreme measures taken against the Profestant clergy.

Nazi Christians Surprised

To their surprise, however, the remaining German (Nazi) Christians have discovered the Ministry of the Interior is seriously considering the suppression of their society as well as the Confessional Synod, as the German Christians oppose the program of the party and the State. In keeping with developments in other quarters, the Hitler government seems willing to abandon the idea of making the church a National Socialist organization and of forcing it to accept the introduction of swastika theories into its teachings.

The Ministry of the Interior wants to efface Protestant youth societies and force the church to limit its activities to strictly religious ceremonies, but it is no longer interested in the German Christian effort to mix Christianity and the swastika philosophy.

Another plan which is not yet fully developed would be to raise Chancellor Hitler to the position of Summus Episcopus occupied by the Kaiser in the Prussian Union church and by the Catholic sovereigns of Bavaria and Saxony in Lutheran-established churches there.

However, the most serious aspect of this phase of the church struggle is the likelihood a decree will appear setting up a church administration by authority of the State and regulating all present issues by law.

This would mean a clergyman or a layman who refused to obey would be subject to prosecution before a criminal court. They would be punished in that event in several regions governed by extremist Nazi officials, notably in Franconia, where Julius Streicher is Nazi leader and in Hesse and Saxony where pastors already have begun to experience the rigors of the coming regime.

It is impossible to estimate exactly how many of the clergy have been placed under arrest in these districts in the last few weeks, or how many are still in prison or in concentration camps.

The Rev. Martin Niemoeller, fighting pastor of the Dahlem church, referring in a sermon today to General Erich Ludendorff's birthday interviews, said:

"At a time when a 70-year-old German general can boast that Germany is the country which has freed itself most from Christianity and a Nazi party regional leader can call the Bible 'trash,' it is the duty of Christians to rise and meet the situation with all their powers."

Heart Balm Ban Made N.Y. Law

State Joins Indiana In Step; Eight Others Get Copies Of McNaboe Bill

Governor Lehman signed on March 29 in Albany, the McNaboe bill abolishing heart balm suits not filed within the next sixty days.

However, future breach of a now existing contract to marry may be grounds for a suit.

Excerpts from the new law read as follows:

"The rights of action heretofore existing to recover sums of money as damage for alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction or breach of contract to marry are hereby abolished.

"All causes of action to recover a sum of money as damage for the alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction and breach of contract to marry, which have heretofore accrued, must be commenced within sixty days after this article takes effect.

"All actions to recover a sum of money for a breach of presently existing contract to marry must be commenced within sixty days after the cause of action has accrued.

"All such actions not so commenced shall be thereafter completely and forever barred for lapse of time.

"It shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, either as a party or attorney, to file or serve or threaten to file or serve any process or pleading in any court of the State setting forth or seeking to recover a sum of money upon any cause of action abolished by this article, whether such cause of action arose within or without the State."

Violation of the law is made a felony punishable by a fine of $1,000 to $5,000 and one to ten years in prison.

Lehman Points to Abuses

Governor Lehman, who signed the bill in the presence of Senator John J. McNaboe and Assemblyman John A. Byrnes, co-sponsors, said in a memorandum:

"I am glad to sign this bill which abolishes the right to bring court actions to recover sums of money as damages for alienation of affections, seduction and breach of contract to marry. The public is well acquainted with the many abuses that have arisen in the prosecution or threats of prosecutions of this type of action. For many years these actions have been used to extract large sums of money without proper justification. They have been a fruitful source of coercion, extortion and blackmail.

BERNARD LEACH GIVES ADDRESS

Mr. Bernard Leach, international authority on handicraft pottery, discussed the handicraft movement in Japan at a meeting at the Peers club under the auspices of the International Society for Cultural Relations Thursday afternoon.

Count Aysko Kabayama presided and introduced the speaker and a representative group of the foreign colony attended. Following Mr. Leach's talk, motion pictures of the kilns in Japan were shown.

"The handicraft movement, a reaction against machine made goods, happened here, in England, United States and countries of Europe at about the same time," Mr. Leach declared.

"The machine can give quantity and cheapness but it cannot give quality. So now we have a movement among educated people to turn away from painting and sculpture to some form of handicraft for artistic pursuit.

"At first of course the artist does not make something for the common people but for the collector. France and Sweden, however, have led in getting away from the solitary influence of the studio and their artists are now making contributions to modern life by making things for the common people.

"Everything we use today," Mr. Leach continued, "is different that it was in previous civilizations. The things we have made of recent years have not been for the use and convenience of the mind but for the use and convenience of the body.

"The movement to handicraft is a movement toward the enjoyment of our wealth to the fullest. I believe that much of the social unrest among the people in the factories today comes from the fact that they are not enjoying their work. They labor for the Saturday night pay check. In the old days, the peasant enjoyed what he did.

"In Japan we have the greatest of all experiments along this line. Here we see the attempt to combine two civilizations which are as far apart as the poles. Here the craftsman is making an article for contemporary use and that use is influenced by western life yet the article on which the artist works carries with it the tradition of centuries."

Mr. Leach illustrated his meaning by discussing the problem of putting a handle on a tea cup. The artist, he said, must feel now that handle should fit, he must understand western and eastern life and this possession of double insight is rare.

Mr. Leach said that the artist craftman must work with the peasants. He has done this and his experience of living with them has given him a rare insight into the lives of the people, he recalled. He paid tribute to the friendship and co-opeeration he was shown by the peasants of Japan and declared that he believed he could not receive such co-operation in any other country.

"Art like this is very useful in applying values and uses. It knows no national boundary line. It is the best touchstone between nations. In the presence of beautiful things, one forgets irritations."

While he showed the lantern slides, Mr. Leach spoke of the work of Mr. Yanagi who is a spokesman of handicraft pottery, and of the kilns where he worked.

Mr. Leach is leaving in a few days to return to England.

Farley To Resign From The Cabinet

gram, before deciding how far the Federal patronage power should be used to force a solution. Its subject will be "Legislative Reapportionment."

It is understood that Mr. Farley will urge the Governor to make a finish fight for reapportionment, even though that should involve the calling of a special session of the Legislature.

Mr. Farley talked with Governor Lehman on the telephone and conferred at the Hotel Biltmore with State Senator John J. Dunnigan, Democratic Senate leader; State Senator Thomas F. Burchill of New York, Frank V. Kelly, Democratic leader of Kings County, and others in connection with reapportionment and other legislative subjects.

Governor Lehman came here from Albany to spend the week-end at his Park Avenue home in preparation of his speech.

Mr. Farley did not confer with Tammany leaders on the reapportionment situation. Some time ago, at a conference here between Mr. Farley and James J. Dooling, leader of Tammany Hall, Mr. Rooling was understood to have told the chairman that the feeling against reapportionment was so strong in Tammany that there was no chance of getting enough Tammany votes to insure its passage in the Assembly.

If the bill should be enacted into law, the number of Senate districts in Manhattan would be reduced from nine to six, and the Assembly districts from twenty-three to sixteen. This would put Tammany in a secondary position in the leadership of the party organizations in the city owing to the great shift in population from Manhattan to other boroughs in recent years and would cause some Tammany district leaders to lose their places. These factors are regarded as even more important in Tammany circles than the loss of Senate and Assembly jobs which reapportionment would entail, as they might mean that Tammany could no longer control Democratic city administrations.

Brazil Planning Supervision Of Shipping Trade

Proposal Is Being Studied By Commission; Would Dissolve Lloyd Brasileiro

Government supervision of all national shipping, including freight rates and port services, would be provided under a plan studied by the parliamentary commission of Brazil on the mercantile marine, says the New York Herald Tribune.

The scheme favors immediate liquidation of the Lloyd Brasileiro, Brazil's largest steamship line, and creation of a new company through a government loan of $40,000,000.

The project considers ocean freight transport "in the interests of the state," and seeks to regulate all such services by federal law. It provides for government monopolization of shipping when this may seem to public advantage. National freight companies would receive definite concessions from the government, including right to import machinery and equipment free of duty. In certain cases the money spent on new units or equipment would be refunded by the state, but such companies would be forced to accept a government representative on their boards of directors.

Rio Free Port Provided

The memorandum advocates creation of a free port in Rio de Janeiro for coal and fuel oil, and would give the government a monopoly on importation of coal and the refining of petroleum for industrial uses.

While the commission continues its studies, shippers, shipping companies and merchant seamen hope for an early action in a freight crisis now considered urgent. Worn out equipment, light cargoes and repeated strikes have left national lines, particularly the Lloyd Brasileiro, in financial straits.

Over loud protests from exporters, freight rates were recently increased in an effort to make ends meet. The seamen meanwhile charge non-payment of wages and complain because of the scarcity of jobs.

Reorganization or liquidation of the Lloyd Brasileiro is considered necessary, and has been openly approved by the marine ministry, but a question of method remains unsettled. By the plan under contemplation the government would liquidate the old company, using its efficient equipment and personnel as the basis for a new government-operated line entitled the Navigation Company of Brazil.

Primarily a Coastal Line

The line would operate primarily along the coast, and would have offices at Rio de Janerio, Santos, Para, Recife and Porto Alegre. It would be administered by a council.

Government supervision of conditions under which national transport companies operate along the coast is required, however, before such companies can be financially secure, the memorandum suggests.

It favors elaboration of freight tables which all companies would be obliged to adopt, and the drawing up of port charges by the Labor Ministry which would be applicable through-out the country. All shipping services would be under the supervision of the Merchant Marine Department, attached to the Ministry of Marine.

League Air Corps Urged to Displace National Aviation

London Conference Hears Of Plan For Control Through Geneva

Abandonment of national air forces, internationalizing of civic aviation and formation of a League of Nations' air battalion were among suggestions for combating the menace of aerial warfare put forward at the conference at London recently on "Aviation as an International Problem."

The conference's intended function was to consider the present conditions and to discuss suggestions for the promoton of international good will in the air. No resolutions were moved.

Among the speakers were Sir Philip Sassoon, British Under Secretary of State for Air; Lieut. Col. J. T. C. Moore-Brabazon, aviation expert and pioneer among British pilots; Dr. G. P. Gooch, historian; Prof. D. Mitrany, professor of political science at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, N. J., and Mr. Jonathan Griffen, young sponsor of a new civil flying plan.

To End Private Activity

Mr. Griffen's plan entails the formation of an international—or, "at the smallest a European"—airways company, controlling all civil aviation, and the ultimate abandonment of private flying.

"As long as air power remains in national hands, it will remain true that there is no genuine defense against attacks from the air," Mr. Giffen declared. "It is therefore absolutely necesary to get national air forces abolished and to get accepted the most effective measures possible for preventing misuse of civl aircraft."

"International control of aviation," he added, "is essential, far from being a hindrance, to full economic development of air transport. For aviation will never pay until it is as safe and regular as surface transport."

Development Nearer

A considerable measure of agreement was accorded to this statement and to one made by Colonel Moore-Brabazon, chairman of one of the meetings, that if civil aviation were not subsidized many problems would disappear.

"The country which will first make flying pay for itself will be aerial master of the world," Colonel Moore-Brabazon stated. "At present the situation is as if we all crossed the Atlantic in the H. M. S. Hood. Civil aviation must be freed from the influence of military policy. Aviation should not breed fear, but it will as long as civil planes are as good as war planes."

"Many advances," he continued, "are held back by the application of large subsidies to aviation. For instance the Diesel engine, which could be of great use to civil flying through its cheapness, its economy and its efficiency, has not been developed simply because it would not be efficient from a military point of view."

"I also feel," he concluded, "that it will not be long before the taxpayers will object to paying large sums of money so that rich people can get from one place to another in the quickest possible time.

The view that commercial aircraft scorned by Maj. F. A. de V. Robertson, journalist aviator, who declared himself ready to "debunk" the belief that civil airplanes are a menace.

Major Robertson declared that civil airplanes cannot easily be converted into bombers, in the first place. They will, he said, need to be entirely reconstructed, for they will have to have holes cut in the fusilage to allow machine-gunners strategical positions.

Major Robertson also declared his belief that the bombing of civilians would not be utilized in another war.

"The first use of bombers," he said, "is to bomb the enemy and the enemy's stores, airports, factories and troops. Bombing cities, besides being immoral, would probably be too expensive an occupation, needing vast air fleets to make it at all effective."

League's Air Force

One of the major problems discussed at the conference was the problem of the proposed League of Nations air force.

Some speakers declared themselves in favor of the total abolition of national air forces and the provision of one large international force.

Others, however, felt that, while it would be useful for the League to have a small air force at its command, this could only be supplementary to the forces of other countries.

The general public's feeling appeared to be, however, that some sort of international force would be a successful guarantee of peace.

Opposition to the League air force was provided on the ground of "very real technical difficulties," one the difficulty of management and the other the difficulty of international law.

It was pointed out by the historian, Dr. Gooch, that in order to obtain an international force some agreement would have to have been made previously to pool a certain amount of national sovereignty.

"I personally wish for the pooling of national sovereignty," Dr. Gooch declared. "I believe it to be the only means of organizing the world. But in Europe at present I believe that view would be sharply challenged. Personally, I do not believe the establishment of an international force would cause nations to abolish their own forces."

Dr. Gooch concluded, however, that it might eventually be possible to abolish national forces, internationalize civil aviation, and make a large League air force unnecessary.

"The more powerful and drastic the means of enforcement at the disposal of the League Council, the more reluctant are the members likely to be to widen the Council's latitude of decision," Professor Mitrany added.

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Man Won A Talking Championship

Despite the fact that a number of women were competing in the talking marathon at the Chicago Radio Show, in the Coliseum, 1930, the winner and runner-up were men.

Paul von Dullack entered the contest on Wednesday and talked continuously until Sunday morning, October 26th, having shattered without a pause for 82½ hours. The contest required the talkers to use a minimum of 75 words a minute and a maximum of 125. Assuming that von Dullack averaged 100 words per minute, he must have uttered no less than 495,000 words to win his prize.

A Curious Find

In March 1916 Harold Dobyns was appointed to a government job of hunting and trapping coyotes. When his and other appointments were published in the local newspaper, he clipped the story and put in his pocket. Later, as he was setting coyote traps, he used that small piece of paper to keep the dirt from sifting under the pan of the trap, according to hunter's custom. On his next round, Dobyns found a coyote in the trap and upon examination of the animals' stomach for his official report, he found the news clipping, somewhat mutilated but still intact enough to be read.

The Bridge House

Covered bridges over streams and rivers has long been a characteristic New England feature. Their appearance is that of a long, low barn or house. Near Webster, N.H. stands a remarkable house which has been built from one of these covered bridges, and it is more unique in that it has five addresses. It belongs to Miss Jessie Pearson of Penacook, N. H. which is the post office address. Its railroad address is Bagley, the automobile address Webster, telephone address is Salisbury, and telegraph address is Boscawen.

SILVER JUBILEE AT NAGASAKI

The British residents of Nagasaki duly celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession to the throne of H. M. King George. An official Thanksgiving Service and a Garden Party were the main features of the celebration, which concluded with a privately-organized fancy dress ball.

Beautiful weather favored the community's efforts to take a proper part in the rejoicings, while the whole-hearted cooperation of the other foreign residents of the port greatly contributed to the success attained.

Owing to the General Synod of the Church of Japan being in session this week at Sendai it was necessary to hold the Thanksgiving Service at 10.30 a.m. on Sunday, 5th instant, in order to ensure the attendance of a clergyman of the Church of England. It is possible, therefore, that the service at Nagasaki was the first to be held in any part of the world.

As the building in which the English services are usually held was not large enough for the occasion, the church at Omura Machi (Holy Trinity) of the Nihon Seikokai was kindly placed at the disposal of the British community. English ladies supervised the decoration of the church and the effect was very beautiful; bamboos were arched over the nave and chancel, the windows outlined with ever-greens, and some exceptionally fine roses completed the scheme.

Canon A. C. Hutchinson, of Fukuoka, who is the Hon. Chaplain of the English Church at Nagasaki, was the officiating clergyman and the official Order of Service was followed.

The congregation included representatives of the Governor of Nagasaki-ken and the Mayor of Nagasaki, both of whom were away from the city, other Japanese officials, and most of the foreign residents of the port. For the address, Canon Hutchinson took as his text "What mean ye by this service" (Exodus 12, 26) and his tribute to the King as a "Christian gentleman" and reminder to the Britons present of the obligations of Christian citizenship were in full accord with the high standard set by the Order of Service. Miss Ponsonby, organist of the Omura Machi Church, kindly gave her services.

For the Garden Party, which was held on Monday afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Ringer lent the grounds of their residence at Ninami Yamate —not only a beautiful place, but one that was specially appropriate owing to the long connection of the family with the port and the many occasions when it has been similarly used by the British community.

A cloudless morning was followed by a dull afternoon, threatening rain, but the rain did not come and the conditions were perfect. The Japanese guests included officials and representative citizens and their wives, while the foreign community was well-nigh complete. The Consul (Mr. F. C. Greatrex) received the guests, who began to assemble at three-thirty. At four o'clock Mr. Greatrex proposed the toast of "The King" and in very felicitous terms made mention of the occasion for the gathering. The National Anthem was then sung.

Tea was served on the lawn and at its close a group photograph was taken.

A British vessel in harbor, the "City of Cardiff", was dressed in honor of the day and the captain and several of the officers attended the Thanksgiving Service and the Garden Party.

Funds for the celebration were subscribed by British subjects residing in the Nagasaki consular district, and the balance after expenses have been met will be sent to London for the National Memorial Fund. The arrangements were made by the following committee, which was elected at a meeting of British residents held at the Consulate in March; Mr. F. C. Greatrex, Mrs. F. E. Ringer, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Ringer, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Walker, and Mr. and Mrs. E. R. S. Pardon. The ladies of the committee, on whom the bulk of the work of preparation fell, received valuable assistance from Mrs. A. Russell and Mrs. G. H. MacDonald.

The ball was held at the residence of Mr. S. A. Ringer on Minami Yamate and made an entertaining finish to a happy day. A striking feature of the illumination of the grounds was the use of large braziers for bonfires, reminding the guests of the great chain of bonfires which was to be seen in Great Britain that evening.

Considerable ingenuity had been displayed in the designing of costumes, some being most artistic and others very humorous. At eleven o'clock or thereabout a grand parade took place and prizes were awarded for the costumes adjudged the best; all the gentlemen's prizes were taken by Japanese guests. Supper was then served in the conservatory and was a very merry affair. Dancing was resumed after supper and continued for several hours. Messrs. F. E. Ringer and S. A. Ringer were the hosts and the members of their families assisted them in welcoming and caring for the guests.

Roosevelt Joins In A Gridiron Skit

west. This little freak, left over from the Chicago Fair, was brought here tonight at a cost of $4,800,000,-000—General Tom Thumb Ickes.

"In all my experience in collecting new and amazing rarities for the amusement of the American people, I have never presented an aggregation equal to this."

An unsuccessful attempt to give the country back to the Indians was introduced by Senator Borah reciting in Hiawatha manner the theme song of the Indians who were "Off the Reservation":

By the shores of Getcha Givme
By the broad Potomac water
Stands the wigwam of the Indians
Who are off the reservation,
From the South Dakota Bad Lands
From the wild grass of Nebraska,
From the Idaho potatoes,
And the cheese vats of Wisconsin
Come the warriors of loud voices,
Fond of hearing their own voices,
With their frequent repetitions
And their wild reverberations,
Shouting, "Whither are we drifting?"

Borah's tribesmen were Big Chief Hugh Johnson, who operated a typewriter in his wigwam, and Big Chief McCarran. When Secretary Perkins and NRA Chairman Richberg appeared, the Indians hid. The message from President Roosevelt brought them back to the scene.

The Indians refused to take back the country, singing to the tune of "No! No A Thousandd Times No!"

No! No A thousand times No!
You cannot give us this mess.
No! No! A thousand times No!
We'd rather die than say Yes.

The successful rearmament sketch poked fun at the unsuccessful efforts of European and American statesmen to come to an agreement on general disarmament. Sir John Simon had the British House of Commons raise the naval budget because he had heard two new fishing smacks had appeared in the Baltic.

Foreign Minister Laval suggested to Prime Minister Flandin of France that the class of 1934 be called out because he had seen a bock beer parade; Commissar Litvinoff told M. Stalin to drink a few toasts—to Roosevelt—and then ordered 10,000 tanks.

Premier Mussolini raised taxes 25 per cent and ordered that the coefficient of the birth rate be doubled.

Chancellor Hitler awarded the Order of Merit to the executioner and demanded a half-hour machine-gun instruction in all kindergartens.

The conference came to a unanimous agreement after Sir John had read the following telegram:

"Ever mindful of our historic isolation and our horror of war, I have turned loose the Philippines, ordered fleet maneuvers in the Pacific, increased our standing army 75 per cent and laid the keels of ten new cruisers. The government will take over the munitions business and I've got a clever new model of an aerial torpedo for the White House mantelpiece.

"FRANKLIN D ROOSEVELT."

In the Pied Piper musical skit the Burgomaster informed the guests that the country was under a plague.

"We are gathered tonight," he said, to free ourselves from the truculent therapeutics of Aesculapian idiots, from the doleful dietetics of disaster, from the precarious paregoric of preachers of pediculous prescriptions, from the cataleptic ipecac of chiropratic economists and from the quasi-scientific sassafras of self-seeking saps. To wit and to witness—Dr. Long, Senator Coughlin and Father Townsend."

While the chorus sang "The Rats Have Come to Town," three characters appeared on the stage. The Burgomaster inquired of the first if his name was Long.

"Yes, sir. I am the head rodent around here. These others are just amateur cheese chasers. I want rich cheese—the Rockefeller roquefort, the Couzens camembert, that Guggenheim gorgonzola, and when I get it, I'll wrap it up in small bundles and pass it around."

"So yours are the fingerprints that are found in all our best pantries," a burgher observed. "What a cute little rat he is, after all."

Father Coughlin refused to make a speech because no microphone was present, but Dr. Townsend promised that each person on reaching the age of 50 would receive $500 a month, a pilot's license and a pair of polo ponies.

"If arteriosclerosis is present," he added, "a record of Reval's Bolero and a rhumba teacher will be thrown in."

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Battery Cannot Store Electricity

An electrical storage battery does not store electricity as its name would seem to imply. The battery stores chemical energy which is converted into electrical energy by the act of discharging. In charging battery we convert electrical energy into chemical energy for purpose of storage. Electricity, like all other forms of energy, cannot be created or destroyed. The energy of a given type may be converted into energy of another type, but there is always an exact relation between the quantity of energy that disappeared and the quantity of the other type which was generated. This principle is known as "Conservation of Energy."

The Tiniest Railroad Train

What is undoubtedly the smallest and slowest working model of a train, and the world's costliest for its size, is the tiny engine and two cars made by J. Martin, watchmaker of Walthamstow, England. The train is constructed entirely of gold and silver. The engine is only 1-⅜ inches in length and the whole train stretches out to 8 inches. It runs by clockwork on a track 4½ feet long, taking 2½ hours to cover the distance while traveling at a speed of about three miles a year.

6,000,000 Children In U.S. Hear Music Programs

symphony. One half hour before train time Damrosch took out his watch and began shaping the music to its speeding hands. The adagio became surprisingly allegro; passages which, on the score, were lagging lamentations became cascades of confused moods. But by this cunning device was time saved and Damrosch smiled genially at his men as the closing measures were played and he prepared a suitable but quick acknowledgmet of applause and a speedy departure for the train but—the audience suddenly exhibited an even greater appreciation for the Tchaikovsky than for the Tannhauser, and beat its hands and beat its hands. The conductor bowed and bowed and the looks on the faces of his men became more and more strained.... But finally Damrosch, who is not called diplomat for nothing by everyone who knows him, managed to satisfy the requirements of appreciation and dash with his men for the train....

In 1926 Damrosch asked to be relieved of the exactions of a conductor's life, and retired in 1927 from full-time service with the New York Symphony, upon the understanding that he would be guest conductor on occasion.

He was taking the not unreasonable view that 42 years of rigorous service in the concert hall can tire a man and that the salt may reasonably have begun to lose its savor. He would have time, as many a man has wistfully promised himself, to do those things he had had to slight during the busy years.... Time for leisure, and a little recreation, time for just thinking....

And then radio reared its surprising head, and Mr. Atwater Kent asked him to conduct this one concert, as he was about to sail for Europe, and he did, not thinking anything more would be heard of it; and three days after the concert, and after he had sailed out of the port of New York, there were 1500 letters on someone's desk clamoring for another concert. Some among the letters were written in the crabbed, difficult hands of people who seldom write letters, and they said, 'I never heard any music like that before." And, "It is the first time I ever heard a symphony played in my whole life, and I served with Lee." And when they told this to Damrosch, he knew that he had tried to close the door too soon on his ability to give music to people, and he came back and plunged in again... And everybody knows what the story has been since 1927, with school teachers all over the country writing programs on blackboards in schoolrooms, and radios on their desks, and children poring over the quiz papers whose questions are to be answered after the listening period.... And for all the retiring Damrosch will ever do now from the world of music, he is about in the position of the fireman who goes around visiting fire stations on his days off....

What does he think about? Well, among other things he thinks what this country needs its not more professional musicians but better ones, and more small-twon orchestras and bands, with competent conductors. He thinks there isn't enough music in the United States yet. Not the kind of music that gets all the people into it. He will invite you to think of Wales with its famous and numerous singing societies and the marvelous Eisteddfod concerts. There are singing societies in the United States, it is true, but not enough of them. He believes the radio is preparing the way. People are much more closely in touch with great music than they were eight years ago.

The child audience isn't the only new audience, by any means. There is a vast stirring among adults who aren't afraid any longer to acknowledge that they like Schumann and Wagner, Bach and Wagner, Bach and Mendelssohn. Women write in and say, "I haven't touched a piano since I was a girl, but my children are grown up now, and I have a little more time, and we have got a piano and I get to practice a little bit now and then, after I have heard one of your concerts, and it sets me kind of hankering to play again, a little bit."

Damrosch is too busy to do much sentimentalizing over his "second career." It is as exacting a life in its way as his first career over was. But if you see the fine glow of the man as he prepares for a new program, or reads letters about one that is past, you realize that here is a man who, quite simply and without fanaticism, believes that music is the greatest thing in the world. And that while misanthropes inveigh against a device that striped the air yith noise from morning to night, Damrosch is giving thanks for a blessing which came along in time to give him a whole new job to do, to the glory of God and the service of mankind.

BRITAIN'S FUTURE

(Concluded from Yesterday)

IV.

Know Your Own Mind—First

The League

This said, and it is necessary, we hope that the incident may be closed when the ortorical Fuhrer has made his inevitable protest. He loves the loud last word. At the next stage, after the Eastern pause, let the negotiations with Berlin be resumed with clear-headed civility and without effusiveness.

Next time, let the more private methods of diplomacy do all they can before we risk further disappoints and disputes as a result of semi-public encounters. Open diplomacy may be a contradiction in terms. Once recommended as a panacea, it should rather be shunned like the plague, unless it is used to ratify and reinforce by popular sentiment through agreements reached beforehand. Above all, let us see to it that when the discussions are resumed in earnest with Germany we shall know our own mind on all main issues as plainly as Herr Hitler knows his.

The first issue is that of the League itself. It is only weakened further by bringing it once more into positions which expose it to defiance with impunity. After last week's proceedings it is patent to common sense that the League must be less or more. To raise it from what it is to what it ought to be remains the steadfast ideal of British statesmanship. But before it can wield a revised Covenant which would be both applied and obeyed, it must become again, or very nearly, a League of all Nations as at the outset when America was a founding member. At present it is a League of only some Nations; and of only a few nations for all major European purposes. Under present limitations, Geneva never can exert paramount authority over strong non-members. To encourage any notion to the contrary is to foster a very dangerous delusion.

V

The Summing-Up—Leadership And Democracy

Germany, for instance, will only be brought back to the League, if at all, by her own will, at her own time, and in her own interests. It is, therefore, a deep mistake, because a course both angering and impotent, to threaten or scold her in its name. She is as free not to belong to it as is America or Japan. The Nazi creed and all its propaganda reject and systematically ridicule what they call the "pacifist ideology" of the present Covenant. This is a bad fact, but it is idle to blink it.

Whether we like it or not, the key-word of Herr Hitler's convictions and purpose, and of his whole movement from the beginning, is "Macht"—that is, the fullest organization of national power. If you want, indeed, to say that you are "keeping the door open" for Germany's return to the League, you should not say in the same breath that she lies under a moral ban. It is like welcoming a man to your hospitality but informing him that before he crosses your threshold you must tell him to his face, and in the hearing of all your other guests, that he is a discredited member of society. We trust that we shall have no more of that contradiction from the British Government.

On the other hand, we must be allowed to wish with all our hearts that many of those among us who now speak at the eleventh hour of "Revision", in Germany's favor had given this journal more support in its instant struggle against the original blunders of the Versailles Treaty. We wish that many of our tardy conciliators had worked oetimes for making to the Weimar Republic, when it might yet have been upheld, some of those concessions which are now spoken of as a placatory offering to incalculable force.

Now all the circumstances are profoundly changed. Of "Revision," above all things, no responsible person ought yet to speak without thinking it clean out. If this portentous question is raised we must all be prepared to face its largest implications or nothing. We must be fairly sure that the concessions supposed—including colonies—will satisfy a vigorous appetite instead of increasing it. And we must be at least as sure that any plan or scheme of the kind will receive the concurrence of the Dominions and can be attempted without leading either to the disruption of the Empire or to the eruption of Europe, or both. These are immense issues, but they are not for the immediate future, and there will be plenty of time to discuss them.

Meanwhile, there are two practical morals for all sane citizens to draw, whatever their other views. One is that in such matters, or in any matters, where the object is peace by concession, no weak country can hope to negotiate either honorably or safely with a stronger one. As well might the earthen pot look to jostle equally with the iron pot in the current; or the pipkin expect to bruise the stone. It is vital for every coming purpose of Britain and the Empire that the creation of air parity shall be expedited and achieved without mistake by such an uprousing of national effort as again shall show the world, with all its dictatorships, what democracy under inspiring leadership can do. The other practical moral is that for the magnitude of the coming tasks concerning defence, the Empire, foreign policy, and a new social program, National Government when the Jubilee truce is over must not merely be reshuffled but rebuilt from top to bottom.

The Smallest Apartment

W. Eugene LeHuquet of Bellevue, Washington, has what he says is undoubtedly the smallest home in the world—the home he has lived in since December 17, 1931. It is an old 1923 Ford sedan, once given up as a worn out car by its former owner. At an initial cost of only $25 LeHuquet made it run another 30,000 miles and it is still going strong. The interior of the unique car includes heating and cooking facilities, storage compartments for food, bureau drawers, a radio, sleeping accommodations, and everything else necessary for travel. LeHuquet has visited 43 of the U.S. state capitals and expects to keep on going in his little home-on-wheels until he has seen them all.

CHURCH MEETING

At the 18th Triennial General Synod of the Nippon Seikokwai (Holy Catholic Church in Japan) held last week in Sendai, the See City of the Diocese of Tohoku, the Rev. Prof. Paul Shinji Sasaki, Professor of Liturgics and Applied Theology, Central Theological College, St. Paul's University, Tokyo, was elected second Bishop of the Diocese of Mid-Japan. Bishop-elect Sasaki becomes the fourth native of Japan to be elevated to the Anglican Episcopate. The Diocese of Mid-Japan has been a Missionary District of the Church of England in Canada since its foundation 30 years ago and the Rt. Rev. H. J. Hamilton, D.D., who resigned and left Japan last year was its first Bishop. Prof. Sasaki succeeds Bishop Hamilton. The Canadian Church will continue to subsidize the missionary work of the Diocese which includes several prefectures stretching through the central part of the Empire from the Pacific Ocean on the East to the Japan Sea on the West.

Prof. Sasaki will be consecrated Bishop on St. James' Day, July 25 at one of the Churches in Nagoya, See City of the Diocese. Prof. Sasaki was born in Tokyo, March 11, 1885 and is a graduate of the Azabu Middle School and the former S. P. G. Seikyosha Shinggako. During the years of 1922 and 1923 he studied at the Society of the Sacred Mission, Kelham, Wycliffe Hall,, Oxford and Westcott House, Cambridge, England. Besides being a member of the Shingakuin Faculty, Prof. Sasaki has been rector of Meijiro Church, Tokyo for the past 17 years, except for his absence in England. During the School years of 1920-21 he was head of the Department of Religions of St. Paul's University, Tokyo and University Chaplain. Bishop-elect Sasaki was ordained Deacon at St. Andrew's Church, Tokyo on December 21, 1912 and Priest at the same Church on April 25, 1917 by the Rt. Rev. Cecil Boutflower, D. D., then Bishop of South Tokyo. Prof. Sasaki was easily the most favored candidate for the election as new Bishop of Mid-Japan.

70th District Rotarians Attend Kyoto Conference

question of decentralization, for he thought Secretary Ishikawa did not make the point clear to all.

Past-Governor Speaks

Past-Governor Yoneyama then rose and said the question of attendance was brought up. He thinks attendance is the life of Rotary and that it must be strictly observed. As to the condition regarding termination of membership, there is a clause "unless excused by the Board of Directors," so it can be carried out with discretion. As to the question of limiting the number of attendance at the Conference, he sincerely hoped that such question would be at once and forever driven out of our minds and always hope for a large attendance. As to the question of decentralization it is a matter of time; sooner or later something must be done like R.I.B.I.

The conference proper closed promptly at 3:30 p.m. The session was carried on like clock work thanks to Secretary Ishikawa. He kept the time limit so rigidly and had no mercy for anybody. Even such "big guns" as Miyaoka, Sutton and Harris (Herbert) had to curtail their speeches.

Visit Heian Shrine

Then the group proceeded to the Heian Shrine where we were invited to a tea by Mayor Asayama and to have a photograph taken. We were all carried in city buses to the shrine and in the beautiful garden, were received warmly by the mayor and treated to refreshments and cool drinks and shown the historical and old sacred dance performed by the villagers. After having a group picture taken of all the people attending the conference, we proceeded to Gion Dance (Miyako-Odori) Hall where we were summoned to be promptly at 5:55 p.m., as His Imperial Highness, Prince Higashikuni was to graciously attend our evening meeting. Promptly at 6, the Prince entered the hall, while all made profound obeisance, and listened to the proceedings of the evening—which were intended to take the place of the after-dinner-speeches. They may be called "fore-dinner" speeches.

Governor Murata said he has worked conscientiously for two successive years, and he was glad that we have found such a good successor in Mr. Asabuki. He then read a letter he had received from Bob Hill, President of Rotary International.

Mr. Tanabe, representing the host club, first of all wished to extend sincere gratitude to His Imperial Highness, Prince Higashikuni, for so graciously coming to attend the conference. Every one of the Kyoto Club literally worked throughout the year trying to make this conference a success. If the guests find anything uncomfortable in the arrangements, it is not the fault of the Kyoto Club alone, but it is the fault of the 70th District—for the understanding was clearly made at the Nagoya Conference that the host club is not inviting the other clubs in the 70th District, but simply working for them and preparing a place for them. He said they were particularly favored with fine weather and everything has gone on smoothly through the kindness of all those who were present.

Next Conference at Kobe

President Fujii of the Kobe Rotary Club, representing the host club for the next conference, said that they all considered it a great honor to have the opportunity of welcoming the Conference to Kobe next year. With due respect, may we hope, he said, that His Imperial Highness Higashikuni, will graciously grant his august presence at our conference also. He hoped that every member of the 70th District will decide to come to Kobe and however large the attendance may be, they will be fully prepared to meet the requirements.

Mr. Isaka said in listening to the report of the club activities, he was greatly disappointed that not a single club mentioned any service rendered to the community during the whole year. The Rotarians who profess to live a life of service must have done something from the bottom of their hearts. Attendance, etc., are the mere clothing and service is the activity of heart and soul.

Mr. Kajima, President of the Tokyo Rotary Club, then rose and said that, representing all the clubs in the 70th District, he had the honor of expressing our deep appreciation to Governor Murata for the self-sacrificing work rendered during his two years term. He was on the go all the time. He was at the further-most north at one time, and next he was at the further-most southern point. He visited all the clubs in Japan and Manchoukuo, and during that time organizing new clubs at several places, attending their organizing meetings and Charter Night Celebrations. He was actually constantly moving about,—allowing no grass to grow under his feet, so, to speak. We were often afraid he might be forced to resign his position as President of the O.S.K. Line! As a slight token of our deep appreciation for the kind service rendered in the cause of the Rotary movement, we wish to present as memento from the clubs in the 70th District, and presented him with a wood-carved image and gold lacquered box.

Mr. Murata Replies

Mr. Murata said he hardly knew how to express his sentiment at the moment. The service spoken of, he considered, as well rewarded in making thousands of friends throughout the 70th District, and in the experience he has gained in executing his duty was worth all the rest of his life. Such experience, he said, can never be obtained in any other way. So it was his pleasure and joy. And to be rewarded again with such a precious gift, he said left him without words to express his gratitude. He said, "I shall daily meditate in the presence of this holy image, and pray for wider wisdom and more power to serve the country and the people.

Mr. Okuyama, President of the Mukden Rotary Club in Manchoukuo said Manchuria was included in the 75th District before the new empire was organized; but to see these flags of Japan and Manchoukuo on each side of the flag of Rotary International indicating that the two countries are bound together in the spirit of Rotary, and to have Tom Sutton come just at this time will surely strengthen the bond of fellowship. He felt sure that the people in Manchoukuo will be awakened to the Rotary movement and will work harder for the extension of it.

After the formal meeting, the whole building and the garden were thrown open with various stands and booths occupied by well-known restaurants in Kyoto, where the members and their families were free to eat anything they pleased. We were later entertained with classical dancing performances and movie pictures taken during the day. Thus the first day program closed at 9 p.m.

Second Day

We were given permission to see the Detached Palaces of Nijo and Shugakuin. Luncheon was served in a large room of the Buddhist temple called Higashi-Honganji, the largest Buddhist temple in Kyoto. The number of tiles on the roof of the main temple is said to be 108,329 pieces, and the floor covered with 401 mats, each mat being 6 x 3 ft. Another building in the same premises has 175,061 tiles and 927 mats on the floor. Luncheon was served in a detached building of this temple. After luncheon the conference was closed and the party was asked to select from various places of historical interest, the ones they wish to visit in the afternoon, and all scattered in every direction.

On the first day, May 4, between 6:20 p.m. and 6:50 p.m., Mr. Sutton broadcast through the Kyoto Radio station on the subject of "A Message to the Japanese Young People," and the conference listented to him in the hall.

On the second day, May 5, at 11:10 a.m. President Tanabe of the Kyoto Rotary Club broadcast his address on "New Vocational Ethics."

On the third day, May 6, at 7:30 p.m., the governor spoke on Rotary for thirty minutes from the Kyoto Radio Station.

Attendance at the conference was as follows:

"BELIEVE IT OR NOT"----by Ripley

EXPLANATION OF TODAY'S CARTOON

A Sack of Flour $275,000

In 1863, R. C. Gridley of Upper Austin, Nevada, wagered with Doctor Herrick, country official of Clifton, that the Democratic nominee for Mayor would be elected. If Gridley lost he was to carry a sack of flour from Austin to Clifton to the tune of "John Brown." If he won, Dr. Herrick was to carry the sack from Clifton to Austin to the tune of "Dixie." The wager was won by Dr. Herrick and the loser carried the bag of flour as agreed. When he arrived, the winner decided to sell the flour at auction for the benefit of the Sanitary Commission, caring for wounded soldiers. The auction continued all over the Union and lasted many months until a total of $275,000 was realized and turned over to the Sanitary Commission.

Dickens' Writing Published In 1834 In Philadelphia

Richard Gimbel Finds 6 Stories Printed Months Before Hitherto Earliest Known Date

The literary tradition that the first American appearance of any of Charles Dickens's writings was in a Philadelphia newspaper and that "America did not print him until he was great" is upset by a discovery revealed recently by Richard Gimbel, says The New York Times.

In a single bound volume for 1834 of The Albion, a New York weekly, the Philadelphia merchant found reprinted six of the first seven stories by Dickens which had appeared in The London Monthly Magazine beginning in December, 1833, and which, with others of his early literary products, were published in book form as "Sketches by Boz."

Dealers, collectors and auction houses have believed for many years that Waldie's Select Circulating Library, a Philadelphia weekly, was the first American publication to print any of Dickens's work. In its number of Aug. 26, 1834, appeared "Mrs. Joseph Porter 'Over the Way.'" This had been published in The London Monthly Magazine in January of that year and was the second of his stories Dickens ever had seen in print.

Stories Were Pirated

Mr. Gimbel found the same tale printed in The Albion on March 29, 1834, five months before its Philadelphia publication. Moreover, in the next number of the New York paper, for April 5, appeared "A Dinner at Poplar Walk," later republished as "Mr. Minns and His Cousin."

On May 10 came "The Bloomsbury Christening," on June 28 and Oct. 11 appeared the two chapters of "The Boarding House" and on Nov. 15, 1834, was printed "The Steam Excursion."

Pirated by The Albion from the London publication, a common practicce in the days before an international copyright law, the first few of the sketches appeared anonymously, as they had in London. "The Boarding House" and "The Steam Excursion" were signed "Boz," as they were in London.

Authorities on Dickens have generally regarded the printing of one of his stories by the Philadelphia weekly as an accident, since up to now any other American publication was believed to have been delayed until after Dickens became famous with "Pickwick Papers" in 1836.

"The fact that The Albion, however, printed not one but at least six of the sketches two years or more before fame came to Dickens," Mr. Gimbel said, 'indicates to me that the editors of this obscure New York paper, printed as a sop to British subjects, were really the first in the world to recognize the genius of Charles Dickens.

Recognized "A Coming Star"

"In London he tried, 'with fear and trembling,' it has been said, to get his work published. But The Albion, which apparently imported all of the English newspapers and periodiccals from which to pirate their news items and fiction, must have recognized a coming star and been on the watch for these unsigned tales by Dickens, for they appeared from one to four months following their London premieres.

"This was a remarkable rush job considering the difficulty of commerce and was the more remarkable because the sketches had been published in London anonymously."

Mr. Gimbel thought it possible that examination of several additional volumes of The Albion, which he owns, would show that the same paper had pirated other Dickens sketches before the novelist won fame at the age of 24.

American Govt. Has Big Problem In Cotton Crisis

Curtailment Of Crop Results In Higher Prices But Less Labor Used

A crisis for the economics of the New Deal has burst upon Washington. The microcosm is the condition of the cotton-growing South and the cotton textile industry of North and South. Both are very vocally in trouble; and the trouble goes to the roots of the New Deal by raising the question whether the price planning to which they are subject is possible in a half-planned economic system. Mr. Roosevelt is faced with the crossroads of more planning or less, says the New York correspondent of The Observer, London, in a despatch dated April 20.

The article continues:

The President's economic philosophy has been summed up as "reconstructed individualism." He aims at recovery through the artificial redistribution of income in the interests of "forgotten men." Statistically, the farmer has been most favored. He has benefited both by enforced subsidy from the factory processor of his products (as an offset to the latter's enjoyment of tariff favors) and by Government manipulation of his prices. Cotton came in for first consideration. This great American crop has been cut by no less than 40 per cent. In return the cotton planters are receiving both a Government guaranteed price and a bounty paid by the cotton textile manufacturers.

Deserted Farms

So far so good. But though the price per pound is much higher, there are fewer pounds to bear it. Plantation owners naturally find that they do not need so many worker families on their diminished acreage, so that labor has been thrown on the relief rolls.

Tenant croppers in thirteen States are the sufferers. "The movement away from dependent living on farms into the ranks of casual labor and relief has already involved probably 300,000 to 400,000 families, and is still continuing," says a commission of inquiry appointed by the Julius Rosenwald Fund. Even this considerable figure seems a modest estimate. Here is one explanation of the swelling of the relief rolls which has been noted at home and abroad as the so-called paradox of the New Deal.

Cotton representatives in Congress are urging various remedies. They agree only in opposing any abandonment of the fixed prices and the bounties. One section asks for general tariff revision in the hope that if the North will allow more imports of industrial goods, foreign sellers will be able to buy more Southern cotton, even at inflated prices. Other Southerners demand a shift of the bounty from the cotton manufacturers' shoulders to those of the more ample Treasury. Such a transfer, by relieving the industry of part of its fixed costs, would cheapen the Southerners' textile purchases. But the President has spurned the suggestion.

Idle Mills

The agitation in the cotton textile industry is even more portentous. New England's mills are partly shut down. So is the mill industry in the South. The cause is closely linked with the planning of Southern cotton cultivation. Add to the fixed prices for raw material and the processing tax paid by the cotton manufacturers the fixed wage costs under the N.R.A., and you have another price-planned industry. Such costs are reflected in prices for cotton textiles, which have gone higher than general incomes. Therefore they are retarding sales.

Demands for relief for the manufacturer are as varied as are those for the cultivator. Some of them conflict with the Southern demands. Instead of supporting the Southern request for tariff adjustments, for instance, manufacturers demand more tariff protection. The competitor is Japan. Domestic fixed costs are so high as to put American mills at a competitive disadvantage. They are also responsible for the loss of Latin-American markets to Japan.

The Slowest Ship

In March 1889 Captain Aristide Cosulich, then an apprentice on the bark "Teresa Cosulich," took 30 days under full sail to cover only 200 miles from Orano, North Africa, to Gibralter. Adverse winds and currents buffered the small ship hither and yon. Some days it made good distances, other days going way off the course. Some times it was within sight of land all day. Later, as Captain of the Italian express liner "Saturnia," Captain Cosulich covered the same distance in less than 10 hours.

Captain Cosulich, who spent his career in the service of the shipping company founded by his forefathers, is now retired and living in Trieste, Italy.

Swiss Concerned Over Prevailing Political Situation

Nation Would Suffer By War Even If She Preserved State Of Neutrality

No country is watching the course of European events with keener interest and higher hopes than Switzerland. None would rejoice more sincerely were the negotiations for a continental reconciliation which would exercise the specter of war completely successful.

The comings and goings of French Ministers to Italy and England, and of British Ministers to Berlin, Moscow, Warsaw and Prague, are hailed as denoting a serious attempt to reach a common agreement before it is "too late." Some of these meetings have been dramatically overplayed, and others have been rendered difficult by unnecessary controversy. But while they are in progress it would be wrong to become pessimistic about Europe's future, says a recent article from Geneva to the Christian Science Monitor.

The position of Switzerland, geographically situated between the chief contending forces, is often misunderstood. It is sometimes thought that it placidly lies among its hills indifferent to the sound of marching and counter-marching in Europe. Since it is neutral, what has it to fear? If the world beyond the rampart of hills chooses to run amuck once more—if French and Germans in particular fly again at each other—cannot Switzerland clamly settle down in its tradition of neutrality until the cannon have again ceased to roar?

Good Location

Indeed, there are superficial observers who still believe that Switzerland is fortunate not merely in a negative sense, but in a positive sense, when its neighbors fall out. It is not only sheltered by the Alps and the Jura, and by the convention of its non-participation in European strife, but it is further favored by the need which the belligerents have of a piece of neutral territory, on which they can freely meet and communicate, diplomatically and commercially, with other countries. Both sides may seek the services of Switzerland, not without profit to Switzerland.

This is a false conception of Switzerland's role and of its desire. Switzerland has suffered as severely as any European country from the economic crisis which is, largely at any rate, the outcome of the political crisis. It is struggling to maintain its standards, its wage standard, and consequently its price standard—or to readjust only so far as may be without the abandonment of efficiency, the cleanness, the comfort, to which it is accustomed. But it is increasingly difficult, in the midst of contending nations, to remain unaffected.

Would End War of 1914

In short, Switzerland, more than the countries directly concerned, is anxious that a speedy end shall be put to the war which has taken various forms since 1914, but has never really ceased. It is neutral—yes; but its neutrality does not imply apathy. It does not take sides in the European schism; but it realizes that its own independence would eventually be menaced were the great powers to pursue their struggle to the point of a general collapse.

In the purely physical domain it is preparing itself against any foreseeable contingency. It has, after a popular appeal by way of referendum, decided to increase its period of militia training. It has even decided to take such precautions as are possible against gas attacks from the air. Nobody can, in this case, allege that these measures of defense are militaristic, for the essential feature of Swiss policy is its resolve to keep out of war. It is, however, understood that information has reached the Swiss authorities of military plans which do not respect Swiss neutrality.

How far such plans are to be regarded seriously is a moot point. There are always plans of every conceivable circumstance, drawn up by every headquarters staff and they may mean little or much. Probably, from the practical viewpoint, they mean little in so far as they adumbrate an invasion of Switzerland. Yet Switzerland is undoubtedly right in making it abundantly clear that it will vigorously defend its mountain passes.

Shunts Off Propaganda

It is not only physically that Switzerland—standing alone in the tumult and turmoil of Europe—will defend itself. It is singularly refractory to propaganda from outside. Four languages are spoken—and a number of variants—Romansch, German, French and Italian; the racial characteristics of at least three nations are blended; there are no fewer than 22 cantons, each with its own laws, associated in the Confederation. Yet despite the diversity there is real unity, and despite the elements which go to make up the Swiss folk they are entirely distinctive. To talk of French Switzerland, and of German Switzerland, and of Italian Switzerland, has always seemed to impartial observers to be totally unjustifiable. There are no such places. There are places where the majority of the people speak French, or German, or Italian; but these places are all entirely Swiss.

Thus the Swiss have shown that there is no need even to have a common language around which to form a nation, and that, on the other hand, remote racial affinities do not in the least diminish present impartiality in face of the European imbroglio. It is not to be said that individual Swiss have not strong sympathies with Germany, or it may be with France or Italy; but they arrive at that sympathy by processes of reasoning. And Swiss people as such have attained a detachment in judging European affairs that it should be the ambition of every journalistic observer to reach.

Last Stand

The father was reading the school-report which had just been handed to him by his hopeful son. His brow was wrathful as he read: "English, poor; French, weak; mathematics, fair"; and he gave a glance of disgust at the quaking lad. "Well, dad," said the son, "it is not as good as it might be, but have you seen that?" And he pointed to the next line, which read: "Health, excellent."—American Boy.

Philadelphia in Asia Minor was the site of one of the Seven Churches of the Apocalypse. Built by King Philadelphus of Egypt, it was named after him, the city of "Brotherly Love." It had a legendary reputation of invincibility, and repeatedly fought off raids by Sultan Bajazet I, whose nickname was "Lightning."

The news of the successful resistance offered by the Christian City reached the Sultan at the same time that he was informed of the killing of his son by Tamerlane's Tartars. In a bitter determination to avenge it, Bajazet besieged the city with a large army, took it by storm, and massacred all the inhabitants. The bones of the victims were ground and cemented and erected into a wall which stands to this day. A few years ago an American Consul traveling in Lydia took some samples of the wall which he analyzed and found to be of the exact gruesome existency as reported.

Social and Personal Notes

Society is expected to turn out in large numbers for the piano program which Madame Madahal Masson will play at the Imperial hotel auditorium this evening. The concert is to be given under the patronage of T. E. Baron and Baroness de Bassompierre, T. E. and Mrs. Joseph Clark Grew, T. E. Dr. and Mme. von Dirksen, T. E. Sir Robert and Lady Clive T. E. The Hon. and Mrs. Herbert Marler T. E. Mr. and Mrs. M. Nagai, Marquis and Marchioness Y. Tokugawa, Mr. and Mrs. K. Kurosawa.

MEMORIAL CONCERT

The Robert Schumann memorial-concert in honor of the composer's 25th birthday June 8, will take place June 11, at 7:30 p.m. in the Gunjin Kaikan Hall, Kudan, under the auspices of the Tokyo Ongaku Kyokai. The program, naturally devoted to works of Schumann's only, is a very interesting one.

The first part is the so-called "Spanische Liederspiel" a cycle of solos, duets and quartets. The words are taken from Spanish folk songs and romances, translated into German by Geibel. It is for the first time that the whole cycle will be performed here. Those taking part are: Miss Hiroko Iwaya, Soprano, Mrs. Fumiko Yotsuya, Alto, Mr. Yozi Otaguro, Tenor, Mr. Tamaki Tokuyama, Bariton. With the exception of Mr. Otaguro, who studied in Paris, all of them are Mrs. Markarete Nekke's pupils, who is now studying with the singers the "Spanische Liederspiel," that will be accompanied by Mr. P. Rosentand.

The second part of the program is the famous "Carnaval." Miss Sonoko Inouye, one of the best younger pianists of Japan. studied in Vienna and is specially gifted for the romantic music of Schumann's. She played this season with great success in the Beethoven cycle, arranged by the Philharmonic Orchestra.

The last number is Schumann "Dichterliebe" Mrs. Netke is considered to be a specialist in the German "Lied" and Schumann and her rendition is well-known in Japan. An unusual event will be the piano-accompaniment by Viscount Konoye. He is a special friend of Mrs. Netke and has kindly consented to play the piano-part in the Dichterliebe. The piano cannot be considered as a merely accompaniment, the whole cycle being composed in a sort of "Chamber-music," and therefore the piano-part is of considerable importance.
